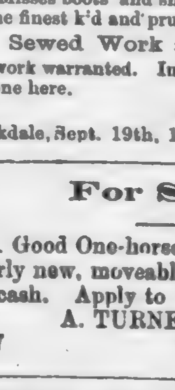
THE BEST REMEDY
FOR
Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.



In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

Dundalk.

The rains of the past few days has given an increased growth to the crops; which have, in general, a pleasing appearance.

It is a fact that Kendall's Spavin cure is all it claims to be. [See] Advertisement.

Mr. Wm. Nelson, of Dundalk, who has been a resident here for several years past, left Dundalk on Monday for the North-west, where he intends to speculate extensively. May success attend him.

The Dundalk drainage survey is not yet complete. Mr Traynor, who took the contract may have to come back from the North-west to urge completion. The work was commenced early in the season in the hope of having the drainage completed this fall, but our hope now is that the survey may be completed.

Mr Ketchum is now turning out his first instalment of leather from the tannery. It appears to be good in quality We trust that it may prove remunerative to the energetic and enterprising proprietor.

THE DUNDALK BAND.

Pursuant to announcement, a meeting was held at Victoria hall on Friday evening, 14th inst., to carry into effect the organization of a band in this village.

James Deans was called to the chair and James Lamon, Esq., appointed secretary. The village was well represented, and every one present favored the establishment of the band. The following gentlemen made valuable suggestions as to the personel of the band itself and its future management: W. J. Hicks, J. Ketchum, G. R. Middleton, William Nelson, and Fred Nixon.

By resolution of the meeting, W. J. Hicks, Walter Rundle, and Frederick Nixon were appointed a committee of organization to control the executive affairs of the band and act in concert with the teacher, from time to time, as may be most conducive to all the interests concerned.

Dr. McWilliam, W. S. Hewetson and James Deans were constituted trustees, with power to appoint a treasurer to hold funds collected, as also to purchase a proper set of instruments when the amount collected by the committee shall be sufficient to warrant them in so doing, such instruments to be deeded to said trustees in trust for the band.

The citizens of the village have already responded so liberally to the call of the committee of organization as to give an aggregate of nearly two hundred dollars on the subscription list, and the amount requisite to purchase instruments being only $250. It is evident that the proposed teacher, Mr. Ketchum, will soon be enabled to enter upon his duties.

The new town of Dundalk is keeping pace with the progressive spirit of the surrounding country. Good buildings are in course of construction, and good roads and sidewalks add to the utility and comfort of the place. Give to these essential matters of business and every day life, the harmonizing influence of a good brass band and the resident of Dundalk can claim to himself a share of the elements of civilization equal to what obtains in the more populous towns.

Dixfield, Maine, Oct. 20, 1880.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co.—Gents:—Please find enclosed 25 cents for revised edition of your horse book. I have tried your Kendall's Spavin Cure for curb, and it has done all you claim for it. By using one-half bottle it entirely cured the lameness and removed the bunch. Yours truly,

FRANK STANLEY.

A number of Shelburn citizens were find the other day for allowing cattle to run at large. During the past few days the cow by-law has been rigidly enforced, to the manifest advantage of that village.

OWEN SOUND AND THE MAYORALTY.

At the last meeting of Owen Sound Town Council, Mayor Barnhart tendered his resignation, which the Council accepted. The cause that induced the Dr. to retire from the Mayoralty have not been as yet communicated to the public, but it is generally believed to owing to disagreement with the council relative to their action in connection with the Government works going on in the harbour here.

The nomination to fill the civic chair took place on Tuesday, and resulted in the election of Mr. Creasor, barrister, of Owen Sound and Markdale, by acclimation.

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL MINUTES

Several of our subscribers in Artemesia have been enquiring of us as to the minutes of their council. Through somebody's negligence no copy is sent to us of the minutes of Artemesia council, as are the proceedings of all the other councils in the district. It is a very long time since we were favored with the minutes until lastweek, when just as we were going to press we received a reprint copy of the minutes of the meeting held on the 1st of June, (nearly 50 days in reaching us from the place of meeting), and our copy stated the meeting took place at Feversham, a contemporary has it Fleshersham, We would like to receive these minutes as soon after the date of meeting as possible.

On Thursday last, Mrs Wilson, of Deep Cove, being slightly indisposed passed into a deep sleep. Efforts were made to rouse her, but up to noon yesterday she remained in a comatose condition. Great excitement prevails.

The average postal clerk is in a bad way mentally. The tyrannical Government has ordered that he shall no longer obliterate beyond the possibility of decipherment, the matter written on a postal card. The clerk, must in future, stamp the card on the address side only.

An elder, while baptizing converts at a revival, advanced with a wiry, sharp-eyed old chap into the water. He asked whether there was any reason why the ordinance should not be administered. After a pause, a tall, powerful man said, "Elder, I do not want to interfere with your business, but this is an old sinner you've got hold of, and one dip won't do him a bit of good. If you want to get the sins out of him, you'll have to anchor him out in the deep water for three weeks."

Another victim has fallen to the idiotic practice of duelling. A young man named Garland informed a young Pennsylvanian lady that her betrothed, Addison, was only flirting with her. Addison heard of this base calumny by his rival, and demanded gore. They met on Saturday and, if the code is correct, Garland proved his statement by murdering his rival at 6 feet distance, each firing five shots.

A man named Kearns nearly scalped his mother-in-law on Thursday at Montreal with a smoothing-iron, in consideration of her having perpetually ruffled his temper. Fined $25. This should act as a warning to mothers-in-law.

Henry Clark, is in Camden lunatic asylum, and has fasted for 41 days for the purpose of curing his insanity. He formed the determination to fast during a lucid interval. Will be cured next month.

Rev. Geo. C. Milne, who was requested to resign his past rate in Chicago on account of agnosticism is going on the stage, and will open at the Grand Opera house, Brooklyn, playing Hamlet.

WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Billiousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Biliousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys. Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Biliousness.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

Thirteen Irish counties have been proclaimed under the new Repression Bill.

Lardine machine oil will not gum or freeze, and wears better than any other oil in the market. Ask your local dealer and take no other.

Everybody think they can tell the editor how to conduct a newspaper to "go."

What is Lardine? Ask any farmer thrasher, or mill man, in fact any man who runs machinery, and he will tell you that it is the only oil which will wear equal to Castor oil and won't gum or clog your machinery.

The man who does not advertise sells but little, and therefore has to sell dear.

LIVER COMPLAINT

Is rather an indefinite term, as commonly understood it consists of a torpid sluggish state of the liver, a deficiency or a superabundance of bile, or an alteration from its proper character. All disturbed action of the liver and biliary organs giving rise to pain in the side, or under the shoulder blade, headache, weariness, dizziness, sick stomach, loss of appetite, bad bowels &c. are promptly cured by Burdock Blood Bitters.

THE MOON.

Behold the moon, the silver moon,
  The empress of the night,
That sheds a radiance o'er the earth
  And fills me with delight.

When the sun has done its mission,
  And is hidden from our view,
Then the moon, like an orbed lamp,
  Comes up in the azure blue;

And glitters on the bosom
  Of the briny ocean wave,
To guide the weary mariner,
  Whilst winds and waters rave.

She cheers the faithful shepherd
  While with his fleecy charge;
And monthly round the earth she goes
  Although so very large.

She lights extensive cities,
  And gleams upon their towers;
And makes all things like dreamland
  Down in yon sylvan bowers.

She shines the same upon the mount
  With its grand and lofty domes,
As on the humble village
  With its free and happy homes.

Yes, this serenest moon,
  She looks as calmly down
Upon the bloody battle field
  As on the victor's crown.

When the Frost King has adorned
  The stately wood with gems,
Then the moon's reflecting rays,
  A charming beauty lends:

Till my heart is filled with rapture
  With the delightful scene,
That looks like some gay fairyland,
  Or some mysterious dream.

She adds a graceful beauty
  To the icebergs chilly height;
And cheers the lonely Esquimaux
  In the dreary winter night.

She brings up faded memories
  To me when I'm alone;
Of ties that have been broken
  With friends I've met at home.

I often think and wonder
  What sights she must have seen;
Of joyful, happy meetings,
  And partings too, I ween.

Of lovers, who walked and wooed
  In the balmy eves of June,
By the placid river side,
  In the mystic light of the moon.

I hope we'll all a lesson learn
  From the moon's benignant face,
To cheerfully do in life our part,
  And fill each one his place.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE LENGTH OF HIS TETHER.

That fateful July night, destined to be marked for ever in the calendars of Lady Dangerfield and Captain Redmond O'Donnell was fated likewise to be marked with a red cross in that of Sir Arthur Tregenna.

'Sir Arthur Tregenna has run the length of his tether,' Lord Ruysland had calmly said to himself; 'it is high time to pull him short up.'

For Lord Ruysland to decree was to act. This very night Sir Arthur should receive his 'short up.'

'What is this about a letter from Cornwall and your departure to-morrow, Sir Arthur? I heard you telling Lady Dangerfield at dinner, but did not quite catch your drift. Business I suppose.'

Business, yes—business too long deferred. Penwalder wrote me a week ago,urging me to return. There's fever among my people, mining accidents and much distress. It is greatly to my discredit that I have neglected my duty so long.'

'Humph! then you positively leave us to-morrow?'

'I positively leave to-morrow. I wish I had gone last week.'

'So do I,' Lord Ruysland spoke gravely, and with unwonted energy; 'so do I, with all my soul. For the last week Scarswood has been no place for you.'

'My Lord!'

'It is high time for me to speak—a false delicacy has restrained me too long. I would indeed prove unworthy the dying trust of my dearest and truest, my best friend, your dead father, if I held my peace longer. To-night I will speak, be the consequences what they may—to-night I will do my duty, however distasteful that duty may be. Long before you return to this house, if return you are mad enough to do, I and Cecil would have gone, and it is neither my wish nor my intention that we three shall ever meet again. My daughter's health demands change—she is falling into low spirits—I will take her to Scotland to the Countess of Strathearn's for the winter. I merely mention this that you may make your farewells to her finally when you part to-morrow.'

A flush rose up over the blonde face of the Cornishman, a deep permanent flush; his lips compressed, his eyes did not leave the table

'I see I do not take you by surprise,' his lordship coldly went on; I see you are prepared for what I would say. 'How bitterly I have been disappointed in you—of all I had expected from your father's son—of—I may say it now on the eve of parting for ever—of the plans I had formed—of the hopes I had cherrished—it would be idle to speak to-night. Hopes and plans are at an end—your father's dying wish binds me no longer, since you have been the first to disregard it. But still for your father's sake, I will speak.

You have deliberately chosen to become infatuated with a woman of whom you know nothing, except that she is your inferior in station—deliberately chosen to throw us all over, and fall in love with a designing adventuress.'

That deep, angry red still burned on the baronet's face, his lips were still resolutely compressed, his eyes still fixed upon the table. At the last words, however, he suddenly looked up.

'Designing adventuress!' he repeated, slowly. 'You use strong words,Lord Ruysland. Of course you do not make such a statement on mere suspicion.'

'I do not. I condemn no one on mere suspicion.

He took from his pocket-book a little packet of papers, and spread two of them out on the table.

Be kind enough to glance over these, Sir Arthur. They are the testimonials of character, and the references given by Miss Herncastle in London to Lady Dangerfield.'

Still dead silent, the young Cornishman took them. The testimonials were carefully worded, the references were to a Mrs Lawton of Wilton Crescent, and a Jonas Woodwidge, Esquire, of St. John's Wood. He read and pushed them back.

'Well,' he said in a compressed voice.

'Read this also.' The Earl pushed another letter across to him. 'I wrote that, as you see, to my solicitor, asking him to call upon Mrs. Lawton. You have read it. Now read this answer.'

He pushed a third letter across. For the third the baronet read:

'LINCOLN'S INN, LONDON, July 29th.

'MY LORD:—In compliance with your demand. I called at Wilton Crescent at the number given. No Mrs. Lawton lived there. I next called at St. John's Wood; a Mr. Jonas Woodwidge had resided their about a year ago, but has emigrated with his whole family to Australia. This is all the information I have been able to obtain.

'I am, my lord, etc.'

Sir Arthur laid down the letter. The flush had faded from his face, leaving him very pale.

'It is plain to be seen by any one not wilfully blind, that the references are forged, by Miss Herncastle, of course, for her own ends.

I tell you the simple truth—tomorrow I shall tell it to all the house—to-morrow Miss Herncastle quits Scarswood, and for ever. To-night I warn you, Arthur, my lad—my son almost. Pause while it is yet time—give up this, designing woman, and for ever. Do not bring disgrace on your dead father—on your honoured name—and lifelong misery on yourself. Go to Cornwall—go abroad—do anything only see Miss Herncastle no more.'

The earl's voice broke—grew actually husky in the intensity of his emotion—in the perfection of his acting. And still Sir Arthur sat like a stone.

He rose and grasped the young man's hand. Sir Arthur rose too—quite white now, and looked him full in the face.

'One moment, my lord—then good-bye if you will. All you have said I have deserved—no one can feel how I have fallen from honour and manhood more than I. Whether it is still too late to repair my great fault must rest with you. What I have returned to England for—what I came to Scarswood for—you must surely know. It was to see and know Lady Cecil Clive, and if she could so far honour me, make her my wife.'

The hound that battered old organ, the earl's heart, gave at the words! he was saved! But his immovable face remained as immovable as ever.

'You are but mortal, Arthur, and Miss Herncastle is a most attractive woman. Without possessing a single claim to beauty, she is a woman to fascinate men, where the perfect face of a goddess might fail. She is a Circe, whose power all must feel. It is not too late, I hope, I trust; and yet Cecil is very proud. If she can forgive and accept you, I can with all my heart. I shall not say good bye, then, but good night and au revoir.'

He then left before Sir Arthur could speak—left him alone in the brightly lit empty drawing room. He stood ir-resolute, then turned and followed the earl from the room. Now was the time—now or never; let him hear his fate at once. Something lay like a stone in his breast—the dark, beguiling face, the soft flute voice of Helen Herncastle was before his eyes, in his ears. Of all the women on earth she was the one woman he would have chosen for his wife, and Destiny had written that he must never look on her face again.

In passing the length of the drawing room to the door, he had to go by the tiny boudoir, where on the evening of the theatricals, he had followed Lady Cecil. The curtains were only partly drawn, and seated within, her hands folded listlessly in her lap, her eyes fixed on the dim starlight, he saw once more, as on that evening, the earl's daughter. As on that evening, he swept back the curtain, and stood, tall and dark, by her side.

Her half-uttered exclamation died away. Before she could speak one word he was saying what he had come to say—hurriedly, incoherently—his face all set and stern, looking as unlike a lover as can well be conceived.

He was unworthy of her—infinitely unworthy; he esteemed and admired her with all his heart; it had been his dying father's wish—he had her father's consent. Would Lady Cecil Clive do him the honor to become his wife?

She looked up at the last words, flushing red in the darkness.

'My father's consent,' she repeated slowly. 'Sir Arthur, tell me the truth. My father has been talking to you to-night! He has—oh! how shall I say it—he has ordered you to follow me here and say this?'

'On my sacred honor, no. I have been talking to your father—asking his permission to address you. I have said before I am unwerthy; if you refuse me, I shall feel I am receiving the punishment I richly merit. If you accept me, it will be the study of my life to make you happy.'

She must say yes—her whole future her father's depended upon it. She could not brave his anger—she could not live this life for ever—what would become of her if she refused?'

All at once Torryglen rose before her, and Redmond O'Donnell's face, bright, eager, loving. Yes, in those days he loved her. He had changed—she was no more to him than her cousin Ginevra, and while life lasted, she must love him. No time to shirk the truth now, she loved Redmond O'Donnell, and this man who stood beside her asking her to be his wife loved Helen Herncastle. What a miserable, travestied world it was; what wretched hypocrites and cheats they were!

'You do not answer,' Sir Arthur said. 'I have lost all hold on your respect and esteem, as I deserve. Lady Cecil, will you not speak at least, and let me hear my fate?'

'What is it you wish me to say?' she asked wearily, a touch of pain and impatience in her voice. 'You ask me to be your wife, Sir Arthur Tregenna—you are a man of truth and honor—you have lost neither my respect nor my esteem. Tell me truly—do you really wish me to say yes?'

'I really wish you to say yes. If you do not say it, then I leave England again in a month—for years—for life.'

She drew her breath hard—she spoke with a sort of gasp.'

'You will leave England! Then there is no one else you will marry if I—'

'There is no one else I will marry if you refuse—no one.'

He said it resolutely—a hard, metallic ring in his tone, his lips set almost to pain.'

'There is no one else I will marry—if you refuse me I leave England. Once more, Lady Cecil, will you be my wife?'

'I—will be—your wife.'

The words were spoken—her voice faltered—her face was steadily turned to the still moonlight. It was over. He took her hand and lifted it to his lips. How chill its touch, but scarcely so chill as the lips that touched it. Then was drawn away and she stood up.

'I leave here for Cornwall, as you know, to be absent two—almost three weeks. To-morrow, before I go, I shall speak to Lord Ruysland. Whatever I have been in the past—this much, Lady Cecil, you may believe of me—that you will ever be first in my thoughts from this hour—that I will make you happy if the devotion of a life can do it.'

'I believe you,' she held out her hand of her own accord now, 'and trust and honor you withmy whole heart. It is late, and I am tired. Good-night, Sir Arthur.'

'Good-night, Lady Cecil.'

She left him standing there and went up to her room. What it had all been—she half-smiled as she thought of it, love-making without a word of love, a proposal of marriage without a spark of affection between them. They were like two puppets in a Marionette comedy playing at being in love. But it was all over—her father was saved—she would make a brilliant marriage, after all. She had accepted him, and fulfil'ed her destiny. Her name was written in the Book of Fate—Lady Cecil Tregenna.

CHAPTER XXII.

AFTER THE MASQUERADE.

By the first train on the morning following the discovery in the churchyard, Mr. Joggins went back to London. By the same train, in a first-class compartment, Captain O'Donnell went up to London also.

His last doubt had been removed—the Katherine Dangerfield of the past the Miss Helen Herncastle of the present were one and the same. He knew as well as he ever knew after the whole truth—the whole strange story. It had not been death, that trance that held her, but one of those mystic torpors which minds and bodies have fallen into often before—a cataleptic trance, so closely resembling its twin sister, death, as to deceive Dr. Graves. But the eyes of love are not easily blinded; Henry Otis had guessed from the first, no doubt, what it was. Why he had not spoken—why he had let the matter go so far as to permit her to be buried, rather staggered the chasseur. Was it that he feared to find his opinion of her being still living ridiculed? or that by saving her from the horrible fate of being buried alive he wished to forge a claim upon her gratitude and love? One or the other hand it must have been—if the latter, he certainly had failed, or by this time she would have been his wife. And that same night—aided no doubt—he had reopened the grave and taken the same inanimate from its dreadful resting-place. He could see it all—the resurrectionist, the story trumped up for the servant next morning, the mysterious sick young lady—the brooding of that powerful mind—that strong intellect in the solitude of the lonely cottage. In that quiet, upper room, no doubt, the whole plan of the future had been laid—the whole plot of vengeance had been woven. Perhaps, too, the narrow boundary line that separates madness from reason had been crossed, and much thinking had made her mad.

Then had come her flight—her exile to America—her theatrical success. Her object in this had probably been to make money to carry out her plans and she had made it. She had returned—had worked her way into the family of Sir Peter Dangerfield—and for the past six weeks played her role of nursery governess. But where was her revenge? What had she accomplished beyond playing ghost, and frightening the little baronet nearly out of his senses? Was it worth while to risk so much to gain so little—or was it that some deeper, darker, deadlier plan of vengeance lay yet ahead? If so, then perhaps he was in time to frustrate it, and yet, in this moment there was more of admiration than any other feeling for Miss Herncastle uppermost in his mind. The bitter pathos of her own words came back with a feeling almost like remorse, 'With whom life had gone hard' indeed—who had been gifted with a great, generous, loving heart, such as is rarely given to woman, a heart that had been broken, a nature that had been brutally crushed until it had become warped and wicked as he found it now. One of these women formed of the stuff that makes the Charlotte Cordays, Joan of Arc, or Lucretia Borgia, as Fate will.

'Surely the saddest, strangest fate that ever befell woman has been hers,' he mused; 'ninety-nine out of a hundred would have sunk under it—died of a broken heart, a ruined life, or given up the battle years ago, and drifted into eternal obscurity. But Katherine Dangerfield is the hundredth who will fight to the bitter end. For Sir Peter it signifies little—he richly deserves all she is making him suffer, but Sir Arthur Tregenna and Lady Cecil Clive are quite another matter. There she must go no further. Otis may have influence over her. If she defies it, then Tregenna shall know all.

He entered a hansom on his arrival at the metropolis, and drove at once to the residence of Dr. Otis. A neat maid-servant answered the door.

'Was Mr. Otis at home?

'No, sir, not at home—won't be home until to-morrow—run down to the country for his 'elth. But if it's a patient—'

'It's not a patient—it's busines. You don't happen to know, I suppose, what part of the country your master has gone to?'

'No, sir—he often goes—the country he calls it—just that. But it's himportant business, missis, she's in, and will see you, I dare say. What name shall I say, sir?'

O'Donnell paused a moment. It would not do to send in his name, he thought.

'Just tell your mistress a gentleman desires to see her for five minutes—I won't detain her longer.'

The girl vanished—reappeared. 'Missis will see you. Walk this way, sir, please,' and the next moment he was ushered into the parlor and the presence of Mrs. Otis.

'You wanted to see me, sir.' The knitting was suspended for a moment, as she curiously and admiringly up at the tall figure and handsome face of the Chasseur d'Afrique. 'Pray come in and take a seat.'

'Thanks, madam. It was your son I desired to see, but in his absence I have no doubt it will do equally well to say what I have come to say to you. Mr. Otis is in the country, your servant tells me—that means the town of Castleford, in Sussex, does it not?'

The little old lady gave a gasp. He saw at once he had guessed at the truth.

'I see I am right,' he said quietly; 'I have come direct to-day from Castleford, in Sussex, myself. On the occasion of your son's last visit to that place, I believe I chanced to see him; I was in the cemetery; I saw him talking to a lady. The lady was Miss Helen Herncastle. Do you know her? Mrs. Otis?'

Again Mrs. Otis gave a sort of gasp; her pleasant, rosy, motherly face growing quite white.

'You know Miss Herncastle?' he said, 'and are interested in her welfare. Your son did her a great service once, and is her nearest and most confidential friend still. It is of Miss Herncastle that I have come to London to speak, knowing that you and Mr. Otis have her welfare at heart. She must leave Scarswood and at once, or else—or else, painful as my duty may be, Sir Peter Dangerfield shall know the truth.'

The knitting dropped on the floor—little Miss Otis rose to her feet pale and trembling.

'Who are you, sir?' she cried, 'who are you?'

'My name is Redmond O'Donnell.'

'I am very sorry to frighten and agitate you in this way, my dear Mrs. Otis,' he said, speaking very gently, 'and if Miss Herncastle will listen to reason, there is nothing really to be frightened about. But one thing or the other she must do—leave Scarswood or tell the truth.'

'The truth!'

'That she is Katherine Dangerfield—not lying in Castleford churchyard, but alive and in the flesh. You see I know all—all.'

She sat looking at him, pale, h..., less, speechless with fear and ama...

'That Katherine Dangerfield a... Helen Herncastle are one and the same, no one but myself knows or suspects. There is the grave, the tombstone with its false inscription to stagger them. I alone know—I know, Mrs. Otis.'

'I see I have distressed you, Mrs. Otis—alarmed you—and I regret having done so. There is no occasion for alarm, however. Miss Herncastle has only to drop her masquerade and come forward in her true character, and I am ready and willing to become her friend instead of her enemy. But I will not stand by and see this deception go on. I wish you good afternoon.'

He waited in town during the four ensuing days, and on the evening of the fifth he returned once more to Castleford.

He presented himself at Scarswood at once. He had not seen his sister for a week. It was close upon eight o'clock, and the silver gray of the summer evening was deepening into twilight as he walked up the avenue. The flutter of a white dress caught his eye amid the dark green depths of fern; a tall, slender—shape, with bright. hazel hair, was slowly pacing the terrace alone. It was Lady Cecil. A soft mass of rose pink cashmere, silk and down, wrapped her. She held a letter in her hand which she read as she walked. And even in that 'dim religious light' O'Donnell saw, or fancied, that the fair, pale face had grown paler and graver than he had ever yet seen it, in those past five days.

'Lady Cecil.'

He lifted his hat and stood before her. She had not heard him until he spoke. A faint, tremulous flush rose up over the sensitive face as she turned and gave him her hand.

'Captain O'Donnell! and just as we began to give you up for lost. I am glad you have come—I have been wishing for you unspeakably. Do you know that Rose is ill?'

'Something has happened—I don't know what, only that Miss Herncastle is at the bottom of that too. Your sister has worked herself into a fever, she has neither eaten nor slept, I believe, since you went away. Something is preying on her mind, something which Miss Herncastle alone knows. Oh, that dreadful Miss Herncastle! Why did she ever enter this house? Captain O'Donnell, we are in trouble, terrible trouble, and she is the cause of it all. Do you know that she is gone?'

'Gone!'

'Been dismissed—discharged—sent away in disgrace. It is the strangest thing—the most wickedly malicious; and whatever her object could have been puzzles all.'

'Lady Cecil, you puzzle me. What new enormity has Miss Herncastle been guilty of?'

'You do well to call it enormity. She has parted Sir Peter and his wife—for life, I greatly fear.'

I dare say people who go thro... life as you have gone, neither l... nor hating very greatly, can aff... be cynical, and hard, and col... have never suffered yourself red, I suppose—how are you stand or feel for your weak... mortals who do? But at lea... you will be able to descend tower of strength far enou... pathize with your sister. with her Captain O'Donnell as far as you understand the ... for she is in trouble. Don't be hard—your life is not all over—... may learn what it is to suffer before you die!'

She turned from him, and was gone—the graceful willowy figure, the flashing hazle eyes. The passion in her voice—what did it mean? He watched her—an inexplicable look on his face—a hard sort of smile on his lips.

'Even you may learn what it is to suffer before you die.' He repeated her words inwardly,as he took his way to his sister's room. 'Ah, Lady Cecil, you taught me that lesson thoroughly six years ago. I was a fool then—a fool now—and I fear the folly will go with me to my grave.' He tapped at his sister's door. 'It is I, Rose,' his familiar voice said. 'May I come in?'

He heard a stifled cry from within—a cry of terror it sounded, and his heart smote him. Poor little Rose! Had it come to this—had he been hard and unfeeling with her, and taught her to fear instead of love him? With the remorseful thought still in his mind, the door opened and she stood before him.

OUR GREAT LOSS BY FIRE.

Markdale has recently received some very great drawbacks at the hands of the incendiary. Perhaps some will say that it is like locking the door after the horse is stolen to recount what might have been done, and taking the necessary steps to prevent its repetition.

The elevator belonging to Messrs. Hill Bros. would not have fallen if water could have been thrown on the end of it. Had we possessed a night watchman, the evil of the loss of one building might possibly have been mitigated or even prevented.

It is perfectly useless for us to suffer vain regrets to get such a hold upon us as to prevent us taking practical steps to prevent a recurrence of such a dire calamity. It is not the first fire, but it certainly is the most disastrous that ever visited this section of country. Greater losses, it may be have occurred to individuals, but never before has the community suffered to so great an extent in this as through the loss of these two granaries. The merchants suffer, the village suffers, the farmers suffer, the carrying companies suffer, and above all, the community suffers, and no one gains.

It is high time the village woke up to the exigencies of the case. Perhaps the first step to be taken would be the incorporation of Markdale. The village is now quite sufficiently advanced to take care of itself. The townships in which the village stands trouble but little about our interests. We may be burned out, robbed, imposed upon in very many ways and although we pay taxes for protection but little protection is afforded. What is the use of our freedom—of the freedom we boast about—if within a few years nearly $100,000 worth of property goes at the hands of an incendiary? Where is our freedom if no one is safe from these satanic attacks? It is the freedom of the lawless! The freedom that Alexandria enjoyed a week ago when Arabi liberated wrong doers. Incorporation seems to be the first necessary step. Let us see about this at once. Call a meeting, discuss the matter, express your views through the paper, anyway you choose, but let something be done. The one great objection some of the ratepayers have is that the taxes will be greater. This is simply an erroneous impression. As it now stands we have to pay one eight of the taxes of Glenelg, and a heavy portion to Artemesia. What do we get in return? We also pay in licenses about $350 annually and get nothing for it. These taxes would more than pay all the cost of a municipal government of our own, and the benefits would be something—and as it is they are just next to nil—and we fail to see any disadvantage whatever in this sensible and desirable scheme. However let's have a discussion and see what can be done.

Once incorporated we could have a fire engine, hose pipe, and a body of firemen. This latter cannot be estimated by dollars and cents. We could also have a night watchman, and thus greater safety would be ensured to all the people.

Only let not this calamity be lost upon us. Experience is said to make wise men of the foolish, and by what name shall we be known if the bitter experiences of the past teach us nothing.

Every farmer should keep a book in which to paste agricultural scraps. Every one in reading a paper will see a number of things he will wish to remember, he will perhaps see suggestions the value of which he will desire to test, or hints which he will want to be governed by in future operations, and yet, after reading the paper, he will throw it down and will probably never see it again. In such a case, all the valuable articles will be lost. To prevent such a loss every reader clip from the papers, such articles as he desires to preserve, and paste them in a book. Such a book at the end of a year or two will be both interesting and valuable.

As at Meaford, so in Markdale, the iron spikes raise their proud heads above the level of the sidewalk, and seem to delight in tearing ladies' dresses, and ripping the heel off a fellow's boot.

War in Egypt.

WEDNESDAY.

The position of affairs in the Egyptian crisis has undergone a change within the past twenty four hours. The Times announces that the British Government, tiring of the delay in replying to the note of the Powers at a moment when delay is fatal, has resolved upon immediate action in Egypt. Order will be restored by an army corps of British troops now organized at Aldershot which will embark at an early hour for the scene of action. Reports from Alexandria represent that Arabi intends attacking the city to-day. Preparations to meet him have been made by the British, and he will probably find the attempt futile. He has sent emissaries to Tripoli, Tunis, and Syria to preach a holy war. Considerable relief is experienced at the departure of Dervish Pasha from Alexandria for Constantinople, the opinion being general that his intrigues did not assist the cause of law and order. An associated Press despatch contains the important announcement that prayers for Arabi's success have been publicly offered in the mosques of British India. If true this may lead to serious trouble, and prevent the despatch of an Indian force to the seat of war.

THURSDAY.

Having determined upon taking the restoration of order in Egypt upon herself, England's preparations are being hurried forward with feverish haste. A cabinet Council was hurriedly summoned yesterday when it is thought final arrangements were made for Military operations on a large scale. It has been definitely decided that Sir Garnet Wolseley will command an expedition of 20,000 men. Several Irish militia regiments have volunteered for service in Egypt, and the feeling at the London clubs is very warlike. Colonel Laurie has also offered to raise a regiment in Nova Scotia for service in Egypt. A reconnoitring party has discovered that Arabi has fortified himself at Aboukir and cut and diverted the fresh water canal which supplies Alexandria. Although there is a sufficient supply to last for ten days, the population, taking the alarm, are fleeing before a water famine commences. Advice from Cairo report a critical state of affairs, and an outbreak of fanaticism may be expected at any moment. The Europeans at Port Said are also in a perilous position, and Admiral Seymour has found it necessary to despatch a force for their protection.

FRIDAY.

Rumours from the interior of Egypt that a general European massacre has commenced has caused great alarm and uneasiness, and will doubtless, serve to hasten the British preparations to subdue Arabi and his troops. The obstruction in the fresh water canal has caused the flooding of the surrounding country. A British force will advance to-day and endeavour to blow up the obstruction. The Chamber of Notables, at a meeting at Cario, decreed the deposition Khedive as a traitor, and proclaimed war against England. All good Moslems are called upon to join Arabi's standard. The Commander-in-Chief, Sir Garnet Wolseley, and members of the Cabinet where in consultation yesterday making final preparations. The Government will ask for a war credit, which the Conservatives will not oppose.

SATURDAY & SUNDAY.

The confidence in himself which Arabi Pasha possesses is really wonderful. He has presented an ultimatum to the Sultan, threatening him with deposition and the appointment of a member of a rival race as Caliph of the Moslems if Turkish troops intervene in Egypt. The Khedive has yielded to the pressure brought to bear by Admiral Seymour, and proclaimed Arabi a rebel, deposed him from office, and summoned the army to the defence of their Sovereign, at the same time assuring them that English and French intervention is merely to restore order. In reply to this proclamation Arabi has formed a Ministry at Cairo, and is rapidly recruting his forces. An advance was made by a small force of British on Saturday, and a portion of Arabi's line, which afforded him a means of an advance on Alexandria, blown up. He is now able to advance only at one point and that opposite the s[tron]gest portion of the defences of the city. Reports from the interior convey news of horrible atrocities committed upon Europeans and Copts, as the native Christians are called at Port Said measures have been taken for the protection of the Europeans there. The water supply in the Mahmondieh Canal is carefully husbanded, and, supplemented by the condensers of the fleet, will probably hold out for a considerable period. A spy and messenger of Arabi has been captured on a steamer from Constantinople and important documents secured. He has confessed and given much useful information. The organization of the British expedition is being hurried forward, but offensive operations will not probably be commenced for three weeks.

MONDAY.

The British troops had another brush with Arabi, their object being to occupy Ramleh, which they succeeded in doing without the loss of any men. Arabi's position at Kaffr-el-Dwar is now untenable, being commanded by British guns. In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. Gladstone moved for a vote of credit to defray the expenses of the British expedition. He defended the action of his Cabinet, and pointed out the necessity which existed for restoring order in Egypt and maintaining the neutrality of the Suez Canal.

TUESDAY.

There is no appreciable change in the state of affairs at Alexandria. The British troops are keeping a close watch upon Arabi's movements and holding him in check. At Aboukir, under cover of a flag of truce, Arabi is making desperate efforts to strengthen his already strong position in the hopes of being able to withstand the British troops.

ONLY THE GEN. MANAGER.

At one of the stations on the main line of the T. G. & B., (it wouldn't do to mention names, the G. M. mightn't like it, you know.) the train had arrived and departed, a few days ago, when the station agent, a man held in high esteem by the townspeople, and everlastingly listening to the 'clic' of the telegraph, as the 'lightning' rattles away on his office table, in the hope of getting a ca'l to take charge of a more important depot; yes, this agent who thought himself second to none on the road, was approached by a well-dressed man, who was smoking a cigar. Said the smoker:

'Keep you pretty busy here?'

'Mm,' was the jerky reply.

'Business on the increase?'

'Mm.'

'Do you run this station?' asked the smoker.

'Nobody else runs it,' growled the agent. 'Have you got a patent car-coupler?'

'Oh, no.'

'I was going to tell you to go to thunder with it, if you had. Want special freight rates, I suppose?'

'No, sir.'

'I don't give any passes.'

'I dont want any.'

'Waiting for the next train?' queried the agent.

'Not particular.'

'Want to charter a car?'

'No.'

The agent left him, and busied himself in his office for half-an-hour, when the smoker came along, and looking in said:

'What's the salary of a position like this?'

'That's my business.'

'What's the income from this station?'

'Ask the boy.'

'Your name is———, is'nt it?'

'Suppose it is?'

'Oh, nothing much—only I'm the General Manager of the line, and I'd like to exchange cards with you.'

'Is that so?'

PUTTING THE CHIEF ON HIS FEET.

The Hamilton, Ont., Fire department, under the training and supervision of Chief A. W. Aitchison, is not excelled in efficiency by that of any other city in the Dominion. Chief Aitchison, by the way, met with a very severe accident in driving to a fire not long ago. His head shoulders and back were injured in a terrible manner. Being asked how he accounted for his rapid recovery, he replied: "Simply enough; St. Jacob's Oil can put any man on his feet, if there is any life in him at all. I used that wonderful medicine from the start, and the result is, that I am to-day in prime health and condition. St Jacob's Oil, the panacea that comes to the relief of the fireman for rheumatism, burns, etc., served me in my trouble, and cured me quickly, completely and permanently. It is the standard medicine here in the Fire Department."

CHATSWORTH.

On Thursday morning, July 12, Mr Merriman met with a melancholy accident, which may yet prove fatal. He had been to visit a minister—the Rev Mr. Keys, and in returning with his team he had occasion to get out of the wagon to open a gate. The horses became restive, and ran against him and the gate. Mr Merriman caught hold of the reins, and was carried some 200 yards, when he lost his hold the horses going at a furious rate; he fell, and the horses and wagon went over him, the reach, which had got broken, striking him. He was picked up insensible and carried back to Mr. Keys house. Dr Oldham was sent for, who dressed his wounds, since which time he has been making slight progress towards recovery. Mr Merriman's escape was certainly a very narrow one.

The Methodist S.S. picnic came off at the grove near Grantown on Thursday week. A most enjoyable time was spent.

Dr Bennett has returned from a tour through Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and other cities.

Mr Curtis' dog was run over and killed on the track, while assisting to find conductor Crate, when he fell off the train.

Mr Daniels, of Williamsford, miller slipped as he was getting into his wagon the other day, and "cut off his ear," nearly. Dr Oldham came to the rescue.

ATHLETIC.

The following officers were appointed: president, W. E. Richardson, vice-pres. W. J. Benson: captain, W. J. Sproule; treas. J. W. Lyons. sec. J. Rowes.

A regular meeting of the A. O. U. W., Markdale lodge, will be held in Mr Rae's shop on Monday evening next at 8 o'clock when a full attendance is requested.

At the last meeting the finances of the lodge were reported on, and found to be in a very satisfactory condition.

The last assessment was for the late N. B. Grier, merchant, Priceville, who was drowned a short time ago.

THE CANADIAN RIFLE TEAM AT WIMBLEDON.

The Prince and Princess of Wales visited the Canadian camp at Wimbledon on Thursday for the purpose of presenting Lieut. Mitchell with the prize badge won in the Prince of Wales competition. The Princess pinned the badge on Mitchell's breast. The Prince congratulated the officers and men, Lieut. Mitchell especially, on their success in shooting, and referred in pleasing terms to his visit to the Dominion. Hearty cheers were given for the Prince, Princess, and the Queen.

Major General Luard has been a constant visitor at the Canadian Camp and watched with much interest the shooting of the team.

Major Gen. Luard sails for Canada shortly.

FIRE IN GLENELG.

On Sunday afternoon, July 16, the barn on con. 3, south of Durham road in Glenelg, near Priceville, belonging to the Rev. Robert McIntyre, was discovered to be on fire. Mr. McIntyre went to see if anything could be saved from the devouring element, but in a few minutes the house also caught fire, and both were very speedily consumed together with their contents; only a wagon being rescued from the barn, and a few things from the house Besides implements, harness, &c., a quantity of window sash, doors, and other building material for a new house was all burned, together with 100 bushels wheat stored in the barn. The loss is estimated at $1000, on which, it is said, there is no insurance.

GUITEAU.

The following verse was found written on a shingle near the jail in which was confined:

"Let him slide without stopping right into damnation,
Unmourned and unhonored, but cursed by the nation:
Perhaps grim old Satan will make him his teacher, The pride of his realm, and also his preacher."

On the other side, in an entirely different handwriting, was written the following:

"Nay, say not damnation, let his spirit go free,
And God will judge Guiteau as he will you and me.
His crime was enormous, but his forfeit was great,
Let us view him with charity rather than hate.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR.—We, as farmers, feel the loss caused by the burning of the elevators, perhaps more keenly than even the village, and consider the perpetrator of the horrible deed as having made a direct and successful attempt to injure the interests of every business man in Markdale and every farmer within ten miles of the place. It has justly held the reputation of being the best market within many miles, owing to the amount of storage, facilities for handling grain, and to the enterprise and fair dealing of the buyers.

I feel, sir, that it is to the interest of the farming community to come forward and relieve the merchants (who lost their grain business) to the amount not covered by insurance. I, for one, shall be only pleased to do my share in the matter and believe I am expressing the opinions of many of my brother farmers.

RAILWAY EXTENSION.

The G. B. & L. H. division of the Grand Trunk railway is now completed to this village, (Wiarton) on the 25th the Grand Trunk supply train arrived from Stratford, bringing the agent and supplies for this station, regular trains commence running on Monday the 24th. The opening celebration takes place on the first of August. Large excursion trains will be run from Stratford and points north. Excursions by steamers from Owen Sound and Meaford will arrive, and it is expected there will be fully seven thousand people in Wiarton that day.—Preparations on a large scale are being made by the citizens to receive them. The railway is in first class condition throughout its length, and it will no doubt become a favorite with travellers and shippers, as a steamboat line is to run to Prince Arthur's Landing in connection with the road.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

On Friday the good people of Owen Sound were surprised to learn that a seventeen-year-old daughter of a station agent there had eloped with a Toronto commercial traveller. It appears that the young lady rose betimes that morning and met the traveller, who was waiting a short distance from her father's house. They drove to Chatsworth, about twelve miles from Owen Sound, and there learned that a constable had been sent after them. They got on the train, intending to get married in Toronto; but when they got as far as Shelburne a constable was waiting for the couple, and locked them up. A telegram was sent to the girl's father, asking for his consent to the marriage. He at first refused but afterwards gave his consent, whereupon the union took place, and the couple immediately went off on their honeymoon.

Two Elevators Burned

Terrible Fire.

INCENDIARISM IN MARKDALE.

16,000 bushels Grain burned

LUMBER DESTROYED.

Fortunately it is but seldom that we have to chronicle such a terrible calamity as befel Markdale on Tuesday morning last, when our prosperous village was checked in its onward progress by the visitation of an awful conflagration, by the side of which all the other mishaps which have befallen us sink into insignificance.

It was about 2 30 or 2.45 o'clock on Tuesday morning when the grain elevator belonging to Mr W. J. McFarland was discovered to be on fire, on the one side by Mr Wm. Armstong and on the other side by several of the villagers at about one time. Mr. Mark Armstrong quickly harnessed a team, and took a load of water to the fire. He was the first there with water; but many others who had been awakened by the ringing of the fire bell, the screaming of the engine at the depot, and by the shouts of many who ran through the streets giving the awful sounding alarm of "Fire," "Fire."

Although there are various theories and opinions as to the place where the fire really started, it is certain that it had got a thorough hold upon the frame buildings before it was discovered. Mr McFarland's elevator was broken into, but only a cutter was rescued from it; the heat being so intense that it drove back the hardiest fireman.

It was evident from the first that Messrs. Hill Bros, elevator must share the same fate, although the wind was in its favor, It caught fire solely from the great heat of the opposite building.

The next building in danger was Mr Ritchie's house. Water was freely used upon it, and the end nearest the fire was covered with blankets and rugs saturated with water.

At the same time great fears were entertained for the safety of the great pile of lumber belonging to Mr Welsh, of Toronto, which had been piled a long way along the track, north of Hill's elevator. Altogether some 80,000 feet of lumber had been piled there. Workers toiled and battled with the fiery elemant and were successful in their efforts.

On the other side of the burning buildings efforts were being made to save the station. It was a long time before it was considered out of danger, especially on account of the great scarcity of water, not a drop being within many hundred yards of the depot or the elevators. It had been isolated as much as possible by the aid of some of the railway men who, were early on the scene.

Not a more active fighter was there on the grounds than Mr. Cesar who coatless, vestless and hatless was very busy till danger was past.

The long pile of cordwood on the village side of the station caught fire, and to it with a wet towel wrapped about his head ran Mr. Cæsar and separating the pieces which had already caught, was successful in putting out the fire in that spot, which had it spread would doubtless have enveloped the station. This was done twice, and burns and bruises show that our station master risked himself courageously.

All danger of the spread of the fire was presently at an end, the burning buildings and lumber having been as far as possible isolated.

A car of wood standing close to the elevator speedily caught fire and now nothing is left in its place but eight wheels. A great quantity of salt in barrels was also destroyed and a vast quantity of ties, planks, boards, and lumber of various description.

Only on Monday was a large pile of lumber placed at the end of Hill's elevator and this is all destroyed. This belonged to Mr. Wm. Milligan and is not insured.

The railway siding is all thrown out of shape by the excessive heat lengthening the rails. Along the main track some of the rails were opened and thus the straightness of the track preserved. Once or twice Mr. Bryden's house caught fire from the burning cinders but Mr. Bryden was successful in putting it out before it had spread.

Great sheets of burning cinders rose in the air and descended as a shower of fire all over the village setting on fire several buildings, but as these were being well guarded by their owners no evil consequences followed.

Messrs. Hill Bros. elevator was broken into and a few things removed, including a weigh scale, several barrels of salt, and a few other articles.

After the buildings had fallen further efforts were made to save some of the grain; a load of water was fetched but thrown upon the burning pile seemed to have but little effect. There was nothing further that could be done. Possibly some of the grain which burst from the second story of the buildings may be saved. It is said that most of the grain in Mr. McFarland's elevator fell through the burning floor into the cellar. If so it is possible that some of it may be good. Mr. McFarland was not at home during the fire, he having gone out on Monday to Bell's lake with Mr. Speers for a few days fishing. Mr. McFarland's loss is estimated at about $16,000 or $17,000, but happily it is to a very great extent covered by insurance. It contained some 7,000 bushels of wheat, $1,000 worth of timothy seed, and a quantity of oats, barley, peas, &c.

Messrs. Hill's building was partially covered by insurance, and the grain (about 10,000 bushels) was also insured, nevertheless their loss will be very heavy.

The early train was delayed for some time owing to the beams over the cattle guard having been burned. Water was thrown upon them and the fire extinguished when railway ties were built up in the cattle guards on both sides of the road. This was done in the midst of a mass of burning lumber and the heat was intense. Nevertheless section foremen Tansley and Arnold stuck well to their work while many of the men skulked off on account of the great heat. At length they completed their task and the train slowly crossed the road to the depot, where the passengers got on board again, and thus after one hour and one minute's delay the express went on its way.

This calamity is without doubt the very worst misfortune that has been known in the history of Markdale. Our progress is hindered, and the loss the village now suffers cannot be estimated, nor can it be estimated in so many dollars. It is almost too late in the season for another elevator to be built for the grain of the coming harvest. Thus other markets will have to be found, and money usually spent here goes elsewhere.

The fire still continues.

The fiend, if known, who had deviltry enough in him to do this infernal act would have met with no mercy at the hands of any of the crowd. He would have been dumped in the fire and roasted piecemeal unless some other more just punishment could have been devised for his benefit.

The loss is a public one, and it is for the public to say whether a repetition of such an occurrence may not to a great extent be prevented.

T. G. & B. NOTES.

Eli Arnold is on duty at Flesherton station.

Not a better kept station on the T. G. & B. is there than that at Kleinburg.

The Markdale station platform caught fire on Tuesday afternoon. It was extinguished before a blaze sprung up.

Several bridges on the line are having the necessary attention,

Mr. Wragge is in England.

Sandy Meldrum has been promoted to a position in Orangeville station as operator. His elder brother, John, hangs out at Kleinburg, and keeps things in perfect order.

The T. G. & B. company are making extensive improvements in the Orangeville station grounds. Quite a lot of business is done at the depot.

The Markdale station grounds were nearly cleared of cordwood ere the fire took place, or the result would have been much worse.

The new roadway at Markdale depot was on fire, but was kept under hand by some of the railway men.

Mr. Cæsar was first on the engine at the depot on the morning of the fire, and blew the whistle for nearly five minutes.

A big business has been going on at our depot lately. Grain, lumber, &c., being shipped away in great quantities.

A well at the depot would be useful in case of fire. How strange the company don't provide such a necessary adjunct to their depot here.

Tansley and Arnold, section foremen, worked well at the fire, but some of the men seemed very indifferent.

MELANCTHON.

It is probable that many people pass the little station of Melancthon almost, if not quite, without seeing it. Nevertheless quite a stirring little village is situated pretty close to the track of the T. G. & B. railway, 8 miles south of Dundalk and 3½ miles north of Shelburne. The village is also some six miles from Horning's Mills. Just to give those of our readers who are interested in the growth of the villages around and about us an idea as to the importance of the village named after the township in which it stands. First there is the township hall, not a temporary frame erection, but a good brick building; a steam saw mill run by Mr. Sloan; post office by James Brown, who is also township clerk, commissioner, conveyancer, &c.; hotel by Mr. Bell, and Calaghan's blacksmith shop. Building operations are very extensive throughout the township. Mr Sloan informed us that he never had such a local demand for lumber and shingles. The township itself is now undergoing an extensive and thorough drainage. It is but a short time ago that this step was decided upon and already its good effects are visible.

Melancthon village and Melancthon township are destined to go ahead and that speedily. Farms are changing hands at $30 to $60 per acre. The new voters' list is a much bulkier volume than last year; and the township assessment will bear favorable comparison with other townships in the vicinity.

A siding 1000 feet in length will be built soon; the place now supposed to represent a flag station will be covered with the usual paraphernalia of a thriving depot, and Melancthon will rank with other prosperous points along the line of the T. G. & B.

THE KISSING CASE.

REV. N. R. WILLOUGHBY ACQUITTED.

The Rev. Dr. Sutherland, Chairman of the committee appointed by the Toronto Methodist Conference to adjudicate upon the charges preferred against the Rev. N. R. Willoughby, of Brampton, forwarded the decision of the committee to Brampton. They are of unanimous opinion that the first charge in the indictment had not been sustained, and that consequently the second charge fell through. The rev. gentleman, as reported in this paper at the time, was formally charged with improper conduct towards a young lady (then Miss Georgie Graham, now the wife of the Rev. J. E. Star), "in that he did on sundry occasions kiss her five times against her will," and he was furthermore charged with falsehood, "in that he did deny the same when accused of the offence." As the second charge depended entirely on the first, both parties agreed that evidence should be offered on the first charge. The trial has been a tedious one, and the evidence voluminous and contradictory, but the finding of the committee is unanimous. A favorable judgment was anticipated, and the result will doubtless cause little surprise.

The new road from Kimberley is confessed to be an improvement beyond the best expectations of its promoters. One farmer, Mr. John Davis, informs us that he came up the other day with over a half-ton load with greater ease than with an empty waggon a fortnight ago. Messrs. P. Harris and Ferris deserve great credit for the able manner in which they have executed their trust.

Mr. J. J. Hobson, of Guelph, who has been through the counties of Perth, Wellington, Huron, Bruce, Grey and Dufferin the past few weeks, informs us that the prospects are good for a more than average crop. In Huron and Bruce they are specially good. They are harvesting their fall wheat in the neighborhood of Guelph this week.

The kissing business among the saints has indeed been quite booming of late. The Rev. J. Willoughby kissed a pretty girl five times, so they say. His fellow-ministers were his judges, and the holy man got acquitted. At Thornbury, Dean Carscaren seems to have been kissing a member of his congregation. The lady was married, and doubtless had sufficient legal kisses to satisfy her. The lady told her husband, and they successfully atempted to get a $75 note signed to keep the matter quiet. But 'frailty whose name is woman,' could not keep the secret, and now the parson refuses to meet the note.

Mr. Hobson, of Guelph, and Mr. Bull, of Downsview are now travelling through the country inspecting such farms as may be competing for the provincial prizes. On Saturday he visited the Mount Royal Farm, belonging to Mr J. Ford, in Artemesia township, 8½ miles from Markdale. This farm will no doubt take a good position among the well-conducted farms of the country. The inspector spoke highly of it on his return, and gave Mr Ford great praise for his ability in farming matters. It is a pity more of our local agriculturists do not compete for these prizes, not so much for their intrinsic value, but on account of the increased value of the farm, farm lands, produce, &c.

An almost fatal accident happened last Saturday. While Mr. B. Wright was hauling in hay, his four year old daughter climbed on the hind wheel while the team was standing, she was not seen until the team started to move on when her screams were heard, the team was stopped and she was found crushed between the wheel and the stake of the waggon; the wheel had to be taken off in order to release her. We are pleased to hear this morning that the little girl is rapidly recovering without (as far as known) any serious injury.

The hot weather seems to effect everybody. The usually sprightly man whose ordinary weather never permits anyone to overtake him, would suffer a torture to keep pace with him now.

A verdict has been given against the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad for damage by delay owing to the freight handlers' strike. If this is sustained by the higher courts many other suits of a similar character will be pressed.

WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Billiousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Billiousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys.

Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Billiousness.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial. I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

WINGHAM, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone if properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago, I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, ... and all kinds of lameness and other ... about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

THE UNDER DOG IN THE FIGHT

I know that the world—that the great, big world—
From the peasant up to the king,
Has a different tale from the tale I tell,
And a different song to sing.

But for me—and I care not a single fig
If they say I am wrong or am right
I shall always go in for the weaker dog,
For the under dog in the fight.

I know that the world—that the great, big world—
Will never a moment stop,
To see which dog may be in the fault,
But will shout for the dog on top.

But for me—I shall never pause to ask
Which dog may be in the right—
For my heart will beat, while it beats at all,
For the under dog in the fight.

Perchance what I've said I had better not said,
Or 'twere better I had said it incog.,
But with heart and with glass filled chock to the brim—
Here is luck to the bottom dog!

BABY'S FIB.

Baby, walking in the dark,
Heard one night a big dog bark.

"Let her creep," she softly said,
"In your bed, for she is faid."

Nestle close to mamma dear,
Baby sleeps, and knows no fear,

Rosy morning lights the skies
And opens darling baby's eyes;

Just as bright as any skies
Are our darling's starry eyes;

Just as fair as any day
Are the curls that round them play.

Nor when next night she walking thought
How nice to leave her lonely cot,

And creep into her mamma's bed—
Oh, shall I tell you what she said?

What a little baby fib
Trundled off her tongue, so glib?

Put the truth it must be told—
And baby's only two years old,

And the night was dark and long—
And she didn't know 'twas wrong—

So this is what the darling said,
Lying in her little bed;

Though no voice of dog was heard,
Though no sound the night air stirred,

Came a whisper in the dark;
"Mamma, she fink she heard dog bark."

[illegible]
[illegible]

In mamma's bed, all in the dark,
She creeps, "cos she fink she hear dog bark."

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

PART II.

Chapter XXIII.

'SIX YEARS TOO LATE.'

Poor little Rose, Indeed! In the dark she came gliding forward, so unlike herself—so like a spirit—so wan, so wasted—that with a shocked exclamation, he drew her to him and looked into her worn face.

'They told me you were ill, Rose, but not like this. If I had thought! If I had known—'

She flung her arms around his neck, and hid her face on his shoulder.

'Don't, Redmond. Don't look—don't speak to me like that. I don't deserve it—I don't deserve any love or kindness from you. I have deceived you shamefully. You will despise me—you will hate me when I have told you all.'

'Will I? I am not sure of that, when you have told me all I think I shall still be sorry to see those hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, and wasted hands. Shall I light the lamps, Rose, or—'

'No no! no lights; such a wretch as I am should tell her story in the dark. Here, sit down in this chair, Redmond, and let me take this chair at your feet.

What must the story be like when the preface is so terrible? Out with it, Rose; I promise not to be too stern. It's the story, I suppose, about this fellow, Dantree?'

'It is. Redmond, I thought to have told you that other night, but I am a coward—a weak, pitiful coward. For seven years I have kept the secret I tell you to night, Redmond,' a great gasp. 'You asked me if Gaston Dantree was my lover, and I said yes. I should have told you the truth; he was more than my lover. He was my—husband.'

The last word seemed to suffocate her. She crouched farther down as though shrinking almost from a blow. She had expected a great start—an exclamation of amaze and horror—either as hard to bear as a blow. 'Your husband! This a surprise. And for seven years you have been this scoundrel's wife?'

'For seven long, miserable years. Oh, brother, forgive me. I have done shamefully wrong—I have been a living lie—I have deceived the kindest grandfather—the dearest brother, but if you knew what I have suffered—'

'I can believe it,' he said; you have atoned for your folly indeed. Don't fear, Rose. I can only regret that you did not tell me long ago. Tell me now at least—all.'

'I wasn't quite eighteen, and just home from my convent school when I met him first, with all a girl's foolish dreams of beauty, and love, and romance. He was very handsome—with that dash, and ease, and grace of a man of the world. And if he had been a very Vulcan of ugliness, his divine voice might have won my dreaming, sentimental girl's heart. The aroma of conquest hung about him—married ladies petted and spoiled him—young ladies raved of his beaux yeaux and his Mario voice, and I—I fell in love with him in a reckless, desperate sort of a way, as later I suppose poor Katherine Dangerfield did in this very house. I was M. De Lansac's reputed heiress then, and just the sort of a prize he was looking out for. Very young, very silly, not bad looking, and the heiress of one or two million dollars—a prize even worthy his stooping to win. My grandfather detested him—forbade him the house—forbade me to see or speak to him. Then began my wrong-doing—I did see him I did speak to him—I loved him—you wouldn't ununderstand if I told you how dearly, and—and—Redmond—I consented to a private marriage. He was afraid to lose M. De Lansac's heiress, and I was afraid to lose him. He threatened to leave New orleans and never return if I refused. I married him, and for a little time was happy in a fool's paradise. Only for a little while indeed. My grandfather, in the most unexpected and sudden manner, as you know, got married. Gaston was furious—no need to tell you how he stormed and raved, or the names he called M. De Lansac. I received my first lesson in his real character then. That year he remained in New Orleans—then little Louis was born, and all his hopes were at an end. He might bid good-bye to M. De Lansac's great fortune. He came to me one night—we met in secret on the grounds—like a man beside himself with rage and disappointment. He accused me of being the cause of it all; it was bad enough to be a beggar himself, without being deluded into marrying a beggar. He bade me savagely keep our marriage a dead secret.

He went to England, wrote me—I replied, got no answer, at length I wrote for my letters and picture; I received them by the very next mail, but not a single word from him besides.

I was ill after that, tired of New Orleans, weary of life. I longed only to see Ireland, to see you. Then I read in the English papers of Dantree's marriage to Miss Dangerfield, of Scarswood Park, Sussex.

How I lived through it all I know not. I read the story of her marriage and the tragedy of her death. How I longed to see and know that he was dead, that I should be free to end my days in a convent.

Miss Hernecastle knows whether he is alive or dead, but will not tell me anything more.

'Well,' said Redmond, 'I pity you, I forgive you. I will find out whether Dantree be alive. As for Miss Hernecastle, she is more sinned against than sinning, and I'm sorry for her too.

'I have,' he continued, 'no pity for Lady Dangerfield, none whatever. However, this house of discord is no place for us now. Pack up to-morrow and go to France. I'll find Gaston Dantree.'

'I have one farewell to make, Lady Cecil, I wonder if she is happy. Have you heard of her engagement to Sir Arthur? He proposed on the night of the masquerade, and was accepted."

He stooped and kissed his sister's pale cheek, and then Redmond was gone.

As he was leaving he thought of the Torryglen romance, and—but just then he met Lord Ruysland.

'Ah, O'Donnell,' said the earl, 'glad to see you. Terrible affair been going on here. All through Miss Hernecastle. She owns nothing truly, still we are certain that she persuaded Ginevra to go to the ball, and there impersonated the knight as Major Frankland.'

'Am sorry for Lady Dangerfield, she has been kind to Rose, and I hope this affair may be settled amicably after all.'

'Yes, I hope so.' answered the earl, 'but I doubt it. It's a confounded bore for me, now that everything is settled—'

He stopped suddenly.

'You allude to Lady Cecil's engagement, I presume,' O'Donnell supplemented, quite calmly. 'Rose has told me. My only surprise is that it should be announced at this late day as news. I believe I am correct in thinking it a very old affair indeed—of six years standing or more.'

Very few people ever had the good fortune to see Raoul, Earl of Ruysland at a loss, but for one brief moment he was at a loss now.

'Very old affair—oh, yes, very—ever since his father's death—in fact, it has been tacitly—er—understood—nothing definite—aw—too young, of course, and all that sort of thing. It was the desire of the late Sir John, as well as myself, and—er—the young people were by no means adverse to carrying out our wishes. All is happily settled now—the wedding will take place without any unnecessary delay. Are you going to Castleford at once? I should like to have a half hour's conversation with you about,'—he lowered his voice—'about Miss Herncastle; I have placed a detective on her track.'

O'Donnell found Cecil in the drawing-room singing just as she used to sing at Torryglen.

Cecil said 'I hope you admire my waltz—it is of my own composing. I call it the Rose Waltz, and dedicate it to Miss Rose O'Donnell.'

'I like it, but I liked the song I heard you singing as I came in better—my song, Lady Cecil. Do you remember the last time I sang it standing beside you in the little parlor at Torryglen, as I stand now? You playing, and your father asleep in his arm-chair—or was he only pretending sleep, and watching us? The last time, Lady Cecil, only I did not know it.'

She made no reply. She still played the Rose Waltz, but she struck the chords at random.

'I remember it so well. You were dressed in white as you are now. White is your fitting color, Lady Cecil. You had wild roses in your hair, and we sang together all the evening and scarcely spoke a word. You have changed since then—grown taller, more womanly, more beautiful; and yet—will you be offended?—I think I liked the 'Queenie of Torryglen' than La Reine Blanche of Scarswood.'

'Captain O'Donnell's memory is good,' she answered, 'better than I gave him credit for. I remember the evening he alludes to very well—the last though I did not know it either. And will he be offended if I tell him that I liked the Redmond O'Donnell who saved my life, who sang songs, who was neither blase nor cynical, much better than the dashing Chasseur d'Afrique of six years after. I fear time improved neither of us; I have grown worldly, you a cynic. What will be ten years hence, I wonder?'

He then spoke to her in allegorical language of their happy time at Torryglen, and when it came to the letters she received after their departure she said:

'Captain O'Donnell, what story is this? Is it—is it—'

'My own,' Lady Cecil! Yes; you need hardly ask the question, I think,' he said.

'Need I not? Yours? And what letter is this you talk of, written by my hand and signed with my name. I don't understand.'

'You don't understand. A few minutes ago you accused me of a defective memory. But I suppose a matter of such trifling import could not be expected to remain in your memory. I mean the letter you wrote me, rejecting my presumptuous suit—telling me of your engagement to Sir Arthur Tregenna, the night before you left Torryglen.'

'I never wrote any such letter.'

'Lady Cecil!'

'I never wrote any such—'

She paused suddenly. Over her face there rose a flush, her hands clasped together—she looked at him, a sudden light breaking upon her.

'The note papa dictated, and which he made me write,' she said in a sort of whisper. 'Redmond, I see it all!'

The old name, the thrill his heart gave as he heard it. In the days that were gone it had been 'Redmond' and 'Queenie' always.

In a broken voice she told him the story of that note.

'Queenie, if I had spoken—if you had known!'

'But you did not,' she interrupted coldly, 'so we will not discuss the question. Why have you spoken at all?'

'Because I could not hard, cold, immovable as you think me—I could not part with you again—this time forever—without knowing whether or no you really wrote my death-warrant six years ago. It was so unlike you—it has rankled so bitterly all those years, and of late the truth began to dawn upon me. Perhaps because the old sweet madness has never left me; and when we have parted—when you are a happy wife and I am back in Algiers—the happiness of knowing that Queenie was all I thought her—my little love, my true friend, and not even at sixteen a coquette, a trifler with men's hearts—will repay me for all I have lost.'

He stopped abruptly. She had covered her face with her hands, and he could see the tears that fell thick and fast.

'Sir Arthur Tregenna is my friend,' he said, his own voice broken. 'Heaven knows I have no wish to say one word he may not hear, but, Queenie, I must speak to-night for the first—the last time. I have loved you—I do love you—I will love you while life lasts. If fate had willed it otherwise—if rank and fortune had been mine years ago, they would have been laid at your feet, where my heart has been all these years. Free or plighted, I know how utterly, wildly impossible it would be for you to listen to me. It may be dastardly deed to speak at all, but I must. You pity me, at least. Ah! Queenie, I would not have the past changed, with all its suffering, its loss, its misery, if I could. The thought of you is the sweetest thought of my life. If I have distressed you by speaking, I am sorry. Forgive me, Queenie, for this and all the rest.'

'Forgive!' He asked no more. And in that instant, if he had said 'Come,' she would have left rank and wealth, father and friends, and gone with him to beggary. But not for the crown of the world would he have said it. He loved her—but honour more.

'Let this be our farewell,' he said gently; 'let our real parting be now. When we say it again it will be before the world. We will both be the happier, I hope, for understanding each other at last; you will think me no more a cynic and a scoffer—I will know you no more for a heartless coquette, Good-bye, Queenie; may God bless you and make you happy!'

He held out his hand; she laid hers in it—the other hid her face. 'Their hands clasped and the spirit kissed.' 'Good-bye!' she heard him say again, holding her hand hard. Then he let it go, walked to the door, looked back once at the drooping figure, and was gone.

SATISFACTORY RESULTS IN MONTREAL.

Whilst Montreal is a model city in many respects, it is not exactly a quarter section of Paradise, as Capt. Géo. Murphy, Chief of Government Police can testify. A reporter of a Montreal journal waited upon this gentleman a short time ago, and put to him the following query:

"Chief, do you find the duties irksome and dangerous in your strange calling?"

"Irksome," replied Mr. Murphy, "I seldom find them; but that they are attended with danger is very true. There is danger to be faced, of course, from wind, weather and criminals, and the least of these dangers, is not those of exposure and bad weather. The heavy, moist atmosphere that gathers over the water is very conducive to rheumatism, and many of my men suffer from that complaint more or less. I believe our danger from exposure from this time forward is past, as St. Jacob's Oil, if applied in time in cases of rheumatism, has a wonderful way of knocking that malady out of people. It certainly relieved me of a pain in my shoulders."

A farmer at St. Foye says he has struck an effective plan to get rid of potato bugs. He puts baby's socks on the chickens' feet, then lets them run in the garden, where the chickens peck without scratching. This seems feasible.

A WOMAN'S REFUSAL.

No, Impertinence, you shan't have one
How many times must I refuse?
Away!
I say!
Or else you'll sure my friendship lose;
I cannot bear such forward fun.
So quick, begone! If not I'll run!
Why now, I'll have to be severe—
No, not a kiss to you I'll give:
Take care;
I swear!
I'll tell papa, as sure's I live;
I never saw a man so queer!
But are you sure there's no one near!

A HINT ABOUT WEEDS.

In harvesting indian corn and wheat, we cut them long before the grain—the seed, is ripe. When the grain in either is fully formed, the stalks are cut; experience has shown that the ripening process goes on; the stalk contains sufficient nutriment to perfect the grains, and it does this after the plant is cut away from the root. Indeed, the grain thus treated, often comes to greater perfection, than if the plant were left until the seed is fully ripe. What takes place with these crop plants, also occur with weeds. Many weeds, if cut up while in flower, still have nutriment enough in their stems and leaves to perfect and ripen a crop of seeds. It therefore happens, that the mere cutting up of many weeds, and leaving them to dry upon the ground, does little towards their extermination. The common Purslane—or 'Pussley,' for example, has remarkable vitality, its very succulent stems will remain alive for weeks, and even continue to grow after they have been deprived of the root. It is one thing to cut up weeds with the hoe; it is equally important and it should always be done in gardens, to gather up the weeds by the use of a rake, and carry them to a brush heap, where they will ultimately be buried.—American Agriculturist for August.

$7000 IF THE CASE IS PROVEN.

A remarkable case is now before an Australian court. A roman catholic merchant left by will a bequest of $7000 to be used to deliver his soul from purgatory. The executor, who is a sceptic and a humorist demands legal proof from the local priests that this has been done before he will pay over the money. The burden of an unexpected problem is thus put upon the church, as it is called upon to prove to the satisfaction of a law court that purgatory has an actual existence, that prayer has power to release souls from it, and that this particular soul has already been released.

The puzzle is a curious one, and the interested clergymen are much perplexed over the quandary in which they are placed.

THURSDAY, AUG. 3

THE RECENT FIRE.

A week ago great consternation had taken hold of the villagers. To-day excitement has abated, and the fire is a thing of the past, and almost forgotten ere it is thoroughly put out.

So much for the townspeople in general, whose interests are but remotely affected by the sad occurrence. Not so, however, with the farmers and merchants more immediately concerned. They are at a loss to know what steps to take to mitigate the evil. Already the harvest has commenced, grain is being gathered, and very soon some of it will have to be turned into coin. But will Markdale market be ready to receive it? Or shall we be reminded of the days agone, when teams were worn out carrying grain to remote markets.

The Markdale grain season of '82-3 is liable to considerable injury, unless steps are immediately taken to mitigate the loss of the elevaters. It is not an easy matter to build just now. The cost of an elevator would be enhanced quite one-third by its compulsory erection at this season, apart from the desirability of working night and day to get it erected in time for the grain.

The farmers are interestedly willing to render assistance; the merchants are interestedly willing to build. We will suggest a plan by which the farmers and grain buyers can now very materially [illegible] merchants would probably [illegible] ced to [illegible] place themselves in a p[illegible] buy the grain from the farmers, provided the latter would render some assistance in the way of [illegible] timber and lumber. We feel sure that if this matter could be talked over by the farmers and the merchants, some understanding could be come to by which both the parties would be mutually benefitted.

THE GLOBE AND THE FIRE AT MARKDALE.

Referring to a leading article in the St[illegible] week, the Globe says, "[illegible] disastrous fire at Markdale [illegible] the STANDARD to address [illegible] but timely remarks to the p[illegible] of that village that a repitition of the disaster may be prevented. A night watchman, a fire company, an engine, and an abundant supply of water are imperatively required. But first of all, the village ought to be incorporated. The STANDARD takes the sensible view of the situation."

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL MINUTES

Anent our remarks respecting the delay in being furnished with the minutes, the Advance goes almost to the extent of saying that we have no right to them at all. Why should one local paper get these minutes supplied to it and not another. If any paper should have them, that paper is the Standard, as it has a larger circulation in Artemesia than any other local paper. We look at the matter in the simple light that these minutes are published in the public interest, and therefore should be printed as soon as possible after the meeting of the council.

As to "belittling" our contemporary, that happens to be a little beyond our power.

PUBLIC AND HIGH SCHOOLS.

Certain changes are proposed in the Departmental Regulations, to take effect at the end of the summer vacation. When formally approved the text of the amended regulations will be placed in the hands of School Officials and others concerned in a matter of such great importance to the teacher.

THE THUNDERER.

The London Times referring to Canada gives vent to the following strong language: "Our colonies owe us a great deal and make us a remarkably small return. We nurse them through their puling infancy, insure for their youth an opportunity for tranquil, undisturbed growth, and our reward usually is that as soon as they reach something approaching manhood they display independence by putting prohibitive, restrictive taxes upon our commerce. Our behaviour to them is largely regulated by a kind paternal feeling, and their behaviour towards us is shaped upon commercial principle, usually false ones. They expect us to defend them and regulate our fleets and armies accordingly: In return they buy from us whatever they cannot get as cheaply elsewhere. They might at least treat us with the respect and courtesy we receive at the hands of our peers."

The War News.

WEDNESDAY.

One of the most important items of news conveyed by the latest despatches regarding the Eastern position is that Germany favours England's policy so long as she holds to her "police" duties, Germany reserving to herself the right to intervene in the final settlement of the question. The preparations against the rebels in Egypt are being hurried forward. The question—what shall be done in Egypt?—threatens to wreck the French Ministry. At the seat of war the British have moved their position closer to that of Arabi. The rebel leader is not pushing forward his operations with the steadiness which has hitherto characterized his actions—owing, probably, to dissensions in his camp. He has sent to the Khedive a statement of the terms on which he will surrender. His offence must be condoned, and he allowed to retain command of a portion of those troops now participating with him in the rebellion. The terms have been of course rejected. A night attack was made by the Egyptians on the British force, but the attacking party were repulsed without much difficulty.

THURSDAY.

Turkey has now accepted intervention in Egypt, and will despatch troops at once. If the Sultan hoped by this move to prevent English intervention he will be sorely disappointed. The British ambassador has declared that the hour for Turkish intervention alone has passed, but that British forces will now co-operate with the Porte's troops. Arabi has declared his intention not to harm the Canal so long as its neutrality is maintained. The troops at Aboukir having refused to surrender, the Inflexible has gone there to bombard the fort. At Alexandria another incendiary fire was started in the native quarter, but prevented from spreading.

FRIDAY.

Arabi Bey is said to be suing for peace, his terms being immunity from punishment and retention of rank and pay by himself and friends, he and they to go into voluntary retirement. Arabi says he would not oppose Turkish troops if they acted by themselves, but still sticks to his original claim that the British desire to conquer the country. Stern measures of repression are still necessary to uphold the law in Alexandria, but order is being gradually restored. A report comes among the latest despatches that Turkey has made overtures to Britain to take Egypt on the same terms as those on which Cyprus was taken over.

SATURDAY.

The despatches concerning the war shew that the influence of the trouble is extending wider every day.

All the European nations are keenly on the watch that their respective interests may not be injuriously affected.

MONDAY.

The European Conference has been broken up by the virtual withdrawal of Russia, for reasons best known to herself, from the deliberations. Yesterday the Grenadier Guards embarked for the seat of war, the wild enthusiasm which was displayed on the occasion demonstrating the feeling of the British public on this question. Sir Garnet Wolseley has recovered from his sickness, and will start for the seat of war on Friday. Meanwhile Arabi is doing his best to strengthen his position and excite and encourage his followers.

TUESDAY.

The first detachment of Turkish troops have embarked for Egypt, but England will not allow them to land unless they agree to remain subordinate to General Wolseley and obey his orders. Arabi, who is kept constantly informed upon all negotiations at Constantinople, probably perceiving that indications of the Sultan's early submission to England's demands, has adopted the desperate resolution of marching upon Alexandria, and at 8 p. m. last night firing had been commenced between the British and his advance guard. He has a large body of troops, and appears from his movements to contemplate surrounding the city and driving out the British. Troops are leaving England daily for the scene of action, and are loudly cheered by crowds who witness their departure.

ORANGE COUNCIL.

The annual meeting of the Grand Black Chapter of British America, of Royal Black Knights of Ireland, assembled in council at Orangeville, 26 and 27 July, 1882.

The central committee met at two o'clock to form their report for the past year, and for future prospects.

The grand chapter met at 7 o'clock in the Town hall, when the grand master addressed the central committee. The registrar's and treasurer's reports were received and adopted.

The council then adjourned till the next day at 8 o'clock.

An address of welcome from the county grand chapter meeting at Orangeville, composed of parts of the counties of Dufferin, Wellington, and Grey, was read and presented by Jos. McArdle and the members of his preceptory.

The grandest feature was the presentation of plate, comprising a silver tray and tea-set, from the provincial grand chapter of Western Ontario; by Sir W. J. Parkhill, M.P.P. Grand Master, to Sir J. T. Jones last Provincial Grand Master for his faithful services during the past five years.

Although the meeting was not so large as in former years, there was a fair representation of offices present.

The next meeting will be held at St. Catherines, June 1883.

Votes of thanks were passed thanking the knights of Orangeville for their kindness.

A diamond valued at $7,000 was found in the bed of a creek near Danbury, N. C., on Saturday morning. Several diamonds have already been found in the State.

On Saturday morning H. Caldwell, J. Hargett, and several children were standing at the foot of a large tree. Lightning struck the tree and severely injured seven of the party. Caldwell, Hargett, and a girl were almost killed.

A young woman of Campbellford went to the circus in Belleville, and in exchange for a four dollar bill received some worthless advertising scrip and her ticket. She did not discover the fraud that had been perpetrated till she got home. The ticket was purchased from the circus agent.

The Allan steamship Parisian reached Moville on Saturday, 6 days 14 hrs after leaving Rimouski. This is the shortest time ever recorded for making the ocean trip, and the captain of the noble vessel is being congratulated on all hands.

Samples of fall wheat from four different fields lying between Barhead mills and Flesherton station were left in this office on Monday. The wheat is well filled, is of good colour, and a yield of about 35 bushels to the acre is expected. These are not at all exceptional cases, but a reasonable estimate of the fall wheat crop in this section.

A well-known citizen entered the garden of Mr Thos. Foster in Markdale, early on Sunday morning and raised several rows of potatoes, most of which they took away; a lot were left on the ground. The party will be roughly handled should they be caught at any such work in future. Villagers must watch their potato patches.

One of the best answers an infidel ever received was made by an old lady to whom he remarked that he didn't believe in a God he couldn't see. "Do you believe you have any brains?" she asked. "Of course," was his reply. "Did you ever see them?" The answer came faintly, "No." "Did any one else ever see them?"—and the controversy came to a sudden close.

At the Sauble, on the 27th ult., Mrs Bumstead, an old lady of 67 summers, was going from the barn to the house, when a board from the roof of an outhouse was blown down, and it struck Mrs Bumstead, breaking her leg, and dislocating her ankle. Dr Oldham attend the injured lady, who is now doing well.

The Mirror gives the Advance some sound advice in the matter of name-calling, that should make the Advance ashamed of itself. It is a great pity that not only some of our newspapers, but also some of our M.P.'s and others do not raise themselves above the low level which permits them to use language unbecoming the "untutored Indian." Children and foolish people fancy that vile language makes them "look big," whereas it just proves their utter littleness and insignificance.

Supdt. Conway, having charge of the Lachine canal, has put an end to indecent bathing for some time. He followed the Ontario mail steamer in a tug, and after some dozen men had jumped into the steamer's swell headed for shore, seized their clothes, and told them to call at his office the next morning. Friends obtained clothing for them after long waiting, but one wag scorned to wait; knocking the bottom out of an empty flour barrel he improvised it as a suit, and trudged home inside, to the delight of the crowd.

Mum socials are becoming popular in country districts. The victims gather in the church basement, and it is agreed that any person who speaks shall be find from ten to twenty-five cents, the fines to be devoted to the organ fund, the library fund, or the bilding fund, as the case may be. The success of the entertainment is determined by the numerical strength of the ladies who attend. No lady has yet escaped the penalty for speaking.

WONDERFUL MATERNITY.

THREE SISTERS BECOME MOTHERS ON THE SAME DAY AND EACH HAS TWINS.

The Assyrian Monarch, of the Monarch line, arrived yesterday afternoon with a full complement of Russian Jewish refugees passengers. Among these there were three married women, sisters, named Ruth Jacobsky, Lena Itakok and Mariam Levinski, who, with their husbands, left Odessa last winter. In Russia where they had been married on the same day fifteen months ago, they belonged to the middle class. The husbands of these women are tailors, with their wives and co-religionists, were sent on board the Assyrian Monarch for New York. On Sunday, June 1, Lena Itakok, who is a very prepossessing Jewess, about 22 years old, became a mother of two fine, healthy girls. Her two sisters were in the act of congratulating the newly-made mamma, when they themselves found that they were in want of the doctor's service. At two o'clock in the afternoon Ruth Jacobsky, who is 27 and a good looking blonde, had done as well as her other sister, and had at that moment presented her fortunate husband with two boys. At nine o'clock at night two more girl strangers made their appearance on board the boat, and Mariam Leuiski, the youngest sister, aged 19, was receiving the felicitations of her husband and brothers-in-law. On Friday the two boys were initiated into one of the mysteries of Judaism. At the circumcision they were both named Isaac, which means "I should smile." The girls have not yet been named, but the children received a present from the captain of the steamer, who declares, although he has carried many thousands of passengers in his day, he has not seen such a remarkable trio as the three Russian Jewesses who vied with each other in their presents to their liege lords and masters.

An interesting case was tried in the Police Court, Port Hope, last Thursday, which excited a great deal of comment. The Rev. Mr. McDermott, the esteemed pastor of the Baptist Church, was summoned before the magistrate on a charge of abuse, preferred against him by an employee of Ambrose's brewery. Last Sunday the rev. gentleman from his pulpit spoke in deprecatory terms of circuses, horse races, etc., and referred to the action of a councillor (the plaintiff) who at a meeting of the Council recently assailed several of the members for voting against the appropriation of a sum of money for horse-racing. After hearing the evidence, the Magistrate promptly dismissed the case with costs to the plaintiff. A great deal of sympathy is expressed for Mr. Mcdermott.

Dundalk.

Fire.—On the 25th of July the barn of P. H. Messeroll, on lot 255, con. 8, S. E., Melancthon, was destroyed by fire with all its contents. The fine celebrated young stallion "Justice," buggy, harness, and other articles, to the value of $1,100, was totally consumed. The fire originated from a spark from the burning swamp on the premises, and spread through the barn with such rapidity that the stall and horse were enveloped in flames before Mr. Messeroll could get into the building, who had a narrow escape with his life in trying to save the property. No insurance.

The directors of the Proton Agricultural Society at their last meeting revised the prize list by adding to and advancing many of the prizes. This year promises to be the best exhibition ever held in the township. We expect all the members of the society to lend their good will and assistance.

On and after Tuesday, the 8th day of August, the entrance fee for membership of the Proton Ag. Society will be $2. We expect that all who wish to become members of the Society will give in their names before Tuesday next, only $1.

The English Church garden party was held last Wednesday evening, when some 220 people assembled together in Mr. Geo. Walker's orchard. The Flesherton band attended and altogether the affair went off very well. The weather was too hot for many games, and ice cream and cherries were long and loudly called for. The total receipts amounted to $66. Some vandal wilfully smashed a croquet set, and a few plates were stolen from the grounds.

Mr. John Lyons returned from a trip through Manitoulin, Cockburn and St. Joseph Islands, and expresses his surprise at the excellent crops throughout the above places. He was informed while in Cockburn that there was not a Canada thistle on the Island. It comprises 35,000 acres.

While Mr. Thomas Elliott, junr., was driving homewards on Sunday evening two other parties drove past coming into the village when Mr. Elliott's horses became unmanageable and started to run, upsetting the buggy throwing himself, his wife and child out. They all escaped without any serious injury, the buggy only being smashed.

ON OUR TABLE.

The American Agriculturist for August is an excellent number of this superior Journal. This number contains a carefully prepared and very large variety of interesting facts and statistics, giving a full showing of the whole Agricultural work, resources and productions of the United States, and of each State and Territory—of great value for further reference. Published by the Orange Judd Co., 751 Broadway, N. Y. $1.50 per year; single copy, 15 cents.

We have just received a new illustrated catalogue from Messrs. Stone & Wellington, of the Fonthill Nurseries. It is admirably printed and full of information. This firm is reliable, and does the leading business in Canada.

Picturesque Canada.—Parts 9 and 10 are being delivered by Mr. Hunt. The views in part 9 are vivid pictures of backwood life, and many of them recall home scenes of 25 or 30 years ago in this section. All the cuts are very fine specimens of the engravers art. The letter press continues to be very superior.

FIRE at CHATSWORTH

GREAT CONFLAGRATION.

SPECIAL TO THE STANDARD.

Our village people were aroused from their slumber on Monday morning about two o'clock by the cry of "Fire! Fire!" Flames were discovered bursting from the upper part of the building occupied by Mrs. Bain as a millinery store, and connecting with Mr John Hopkins' shed and hotel.

The fire was first noticed by Mr. Bain, who gave the alarm. Mr. Duffy arose terrified lest the flames should reach his place, which was just across the street. He aroused the neighbourhood, and very soon a crowd had congregated, and set to work with a will to save furniture, and to stay the progress of the flames.

A small hand engine belonging to Mr McGill was soon on the ground, and did valuable service in saving the house occupied by Miss Garrett, dress maker, it being only a few feet from the burning building.

All hope of saving Mr Hopkin's buildings was given up, and the contents were speedily removed, very little being left in them of much value. About 70 cords of wood were consumed in the yard, and the stable loft which had recently been filled with hay was speedily burned. The furniture was badly damaged in moving it from the house.

In the meantime, the front and the roofs of the buildings on the opposite side of the street were kept well drenched with water.

A desperate heat was thrown out while the outhouses were burning, which for a time endangered the row of small buildings south of the fire, but no further damage was done in that direction.

All this time a great struggle was going on in order to save Miss Garrett's dressmaking establishment, and at length the efforts of the workers were successful.

It was fortunate that the morning was calm, otherwise it would have been impossible to have stayed the progress of the devouring element, as it was the northern portion of the village received a shower of burning cinders, which would have been the means of fresh fires had they not been closely watched and speedily watered. All worked like heroes, both male and female. in carrying water, saving goods, &c.

The fire was, without doubt the work of an incendiary, and strong suspicions are entertained against a well-known resident of our usually quiet village.

Mr Hopkins' loss is $3.500. He is insured in the Citizens Company for $2000.

There is said to be no insurance on Mrs Bain's buildings. Mr Hopkins has not yet decided whether he will rebuild.

MELANCTHON.

Mr M. Neithercut has a yield of four tons per acre off ten acres of hay.

Bush fires are doing considerable damage in this section.

Last week Mr Middaugh's stable was burned, and his house had a narrow escape.

Mr Jas. Brown had a quantity of fence burned.

An old man named Kennedy died suddenly last week from disease of the heart.

Mr Councillor Bailey had 4 sheep killed on Sunday morning. the 23rd ult. by a lynx.

WILLIAMSFORD.

Fall wheat harvest is the order of the day.

One day last week while J. Henderson's team was standing in front of the post office the horses became frightened and ran away, doing considerable damage to the wagon and harness and allowing Mr. H. to walk home, a distance of three miles.

Mr. J. Paterson is taking the run in blacksmithing and we wish him success.

Mr. S. Watson has purchased a new engine for his pump shop and intends to manufacture by steam.

Mr. M. Smith is about to put more machinery in his grist mill and expects to do a good business this fall.

Timber, cordwood and tan bark has been shipped in large quantities from this station within the last few days.

Rev. Mr. Hart complains of business being slack in the matrimonial line.

The natives of our village were astonished when they learned that Mr. Dickey had captured the heart and hand of the "Maid of the Hill." Rev. Mr. Keys made them happy. We understand they are about to take a tour to Christian Island.

The case of Graves, a fugitive insolvent from England, recently arrested at Quebec, came before Judge Casault in the Superior Court last Thursday, when he released the prisoner, holding that an offence against the bankruptcy law of England, even if fraudulent under that Act, did not justify the detention upon a telegram of a prisoner in Canada, where such an offence is unknown, Canada having no bankrupt law, and further, that a prisoner could only be detained in custody in Canada for an offence for which, if committed in Canada, he might be tried there.

The hot weather seems to effect everybody. The usually sprightly man, who in ordinary weather never permits anyone to overtake him, would suffer a tortoise to keep pace with him now.

In Cattle we consider the Shorthorn or Durham superior to any cross with our common stock to produce good beefers and milkers which is now and will be one of the best products of the farm. In Sheep, as far as our experience goes, we consider the Leicester has been the best, but as the demand is more for fine wool and sheep for export we would recommend Shropshires as the best. In Swine we consider Berkshire the best.—Robt. Battie, Chairman.

Moved by Bros. Doyle and Webster, that the report now read be received, adopted, and engrossed in the minutes—carried.

Bro. Jas. Kennedy introduced the following resolution which was adopted. "Whereas the definition of law in the abstract is held to be a command emanating from the king with unlimited power to enforce the command practically considered law, is a certain expression of the will of the people applied in that behalf for the purpose of maintaining right in the conduct of man towards man, always like the natural forces operating as a necessity, hence its jurisdiction should be scrupulously and expediently defined and its application for the purpose of quieting disputes allowed after reasonably fair minor means have been tried but failed, provided always that law is only and the ultimate expedient of guiding the conduct of men in civil society. Be it therefore resolved in compliance with declarations of principles (pages 7, 8 and 9 Grange Constitution), which enjoins in effect to aim at the reduction of expenses to avoid litigation by arbitration, &c., that the jurisdiction of the division court be extended to $400; that the County Court be dropped; that the personal actions at law that is claims lying within and without a written agreement be settled by arbitration made compulsory, provided one of the parties to a dispute demands it.

THE PUZZLED DUTCHMAN.

One who does not believe in immersion for baptism preached on the subject of baptism. In the course of his remarks he said that some believe it necessary to go down into the water, and come up out of it, to be baptised. But this he claimed to be a fallacy, for the preposition "into" of the Scriptures should be rendered differently, as it does not mean "into" at all. "Moses," he said, "we are told, went up into the mountain, etc. Now we do not suppose he went into the mountain, but went unto it. So with going into the water, and being baptized in the ordinary way, by sprinkling or pouring. He carried this idea out fully, and in due season invited any one so disposed to rise and express their thoughts. Quite a number of his brethren arose and said they were well pleased with the sound sermon they had just heard. Finally a corpulent gentleman of Teutonic extraction, a stranger to all, arose and broke the silence that was almost painful, as follows:

"Mister Breacher, I ish so glad I vash here to night, for I has had explained to my mindt some dings dot I never could believe before. Oh, I ish so glad dot into does not mean into at all, but just close by or near to, for I now pelieve many things what I could not pelieve before. We reat, Mr. Breacher, dot Taniel vos cast into der den of lions, and came out alife. Now I neffer could pelieve dot, for wilt peasts would shust eat him right off; but now it is very clear to my mint. He vas shust close py or near to, und did not get into der den at all. Oh, I ish so glad I vash here to-night. Again we read dot de Hebrew children vas cast into der fiery furnace, und dot always looked like a big story too, for they would have been burnt up; but it vas all plain to my mint now, for dey vas shust close py or near to der fiery furnace. Oh. I vas so glad I vash here to night. And den, Mr. Breacher, it is said dot Jonah vas cast into der sea, und taken into der whale's pelley. Now I never could pelieve dot. It always seemed to me to be a big fish story, but it vas all plain to my mint now. He vas not in der whale's pelly at all, but shump onto his pack and rode ashore. Oh, I vash glad I vas here to-night.

"And now, Mr. Breacher, if you will shust explain two more passages of Scriptures, I shall be oh so happy I vas here to-night. One of dem ish vere it says dot der vicked shall be cast into a lake dot burns mit fire and primstone always. Oh, Mr. Breacher, shall I pe cast dot lake if I am vicked or shust close py or near to—shust near enough to be comfortable? Oh, I hope you tell me I pe cast only shust py a good vays off, and I vill pe so glad dot I vos here to night. Der oder passage is dot vich says blessed are dey who do these commandments, dot dey have right to der tree of life, und enter in droo der gates of der city, and not shust close by or near to—shust near enough to see vat I vas lost—and I shall be so glad dot I vas here to-night."

WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Biliousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Biliousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys.

Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Biliousness.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

Foo Choo's Balsam of Shark's Oil positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as Carcharodon Rondeletii. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—Editor of Mercantile Review.

Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

Counterfeit 50 cent pieces are in the district.

Those affected with weak lungs, sluggish liver, or derangement of the kidneys, should procure a package of Dr Carson's Liver and Lung Compound. Each 50 cent package makes three pints of Syrup. It is a valuable collection of roots, herbs, and barks, and its results are wonderful. For sale by all druggists. Turner, agent, Markdale; Parsons, agent, Dundalk.

A new caretaker at the Zoo trod on the alligator's tail to see if he was alive. It was, and the caretaker soon found himself in the pond, having been whisked thither by the caudal appendage of the reptile. He respects the alligator's tail, and stands clear.

An honest medicine is the noblest work of man, and we can assure our readers that Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry is not only reliable. but is almost infallable to cure Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Canker of the stomach and bowels, and the various Summer Complaints, whose attacks are often sudden and fatal.

There would be little or no sickness during the hot months of July and August if every one would take Dr Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters. [illegible] prevent and cure all de[illegible] of the stomach and bowels [illegible] large bottles at 50 cents by all [illegible] Turner, Markdale: Par[illegible] dalk.

Over 600 excursionists visited Toronto from along the line of the T.G. & B. on Friday last. They visited the Zoo.

The Wild Strawberry plant possesses rare virtue as a cleansing, cooling, astringent, anteseptic, and healing medicine, and when combined with other valuable vegetable extracts, as in Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, it is an unfailing remedy in all Bowel complaints.

Clergymen, if they are to do good, must speak plainly.

Davy & Clark, Druggists, Renfrew, write us June 3rd. "We have sold Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for a number of years, and find nothing equal to it, for the purpose for which it is designed." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cures all kinds of Bowel complaints incident to Summer and Fall.

The man O'Brien, arrested in Venezuela for connection with the Dublin murder turns out to be an impostor. He wanted to get a free ride to Emerald Isle.

A Reward—Of one dozen 'Teaberry' to any one sending the best four line rhyme on 'Teaberry,' the remarkable little gem for the Teeth and Breath. Ask your druggist for address.

Nearly 50 deaths occurred at New York on Tuesday through the excessive heat.

The firm of J. & S. McEachen, Douglas, writes us June 1st, saying, "There is not another preparation we can recommend with so much confidence as Burdock Blood Bitters, as it invariably gives the best of satisfaction." Burdock Blood Bitters cures all diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys.

The Canada Atlantic Railway will shortly be opened for traffic. Trial trip last week.

For a long time there has been a need for just such a liniment as Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Mr James Smith, Rama, has about the best field of wheat in Ontario. It measures over six feet in heigth; well [illegible] ears.

[illegible] edy for Sea Sickness, for [illegible] n of the stomach and [illegible] nker of the stomach and [illegible] s and hemorrage, and [illegible] of bowel complaints, [illegible] Wild Strawberry is na[illegible] cific.

W. H. Crooker, Druggist, of Watertown, under date of June 1st, writes that "Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cannot be surpassed, when all other remedies fail then it comes to the rescue, and I find the sales large and increasing." Wild Strawberry positively cures all Bowel complaints.

The T. G. & B. Ry. continues to make rapid progress; nothing proves this so much as the traffic returns, which are now nearly $4000 per week more than last year.

C. M. Moseman & Bros.' office is the head-centre for all prominent horsemen of New York City. In a letter of recent date says: "We are perfectly satisfied that there never was anything made to equal Kendall's Spavin Cure, nor can there be anything to take its place, as it removes the trouble, and no remedy can do more." Read advertisement.

Horse owners cannot afford to overlook the wonderful success of Kendall's Spavin Cure.

BILIOUSNESS.

A furred tongue, bad taste in the mouth, nausea vomiting, variable appetite, alternate diarrhœa and costiveness, faintness, weariness, yellow cast of eyes and countenance, indicates serious biliary trouble. Jaundice is a dangerous disease, it is an overflow of bad bile in the circulation, any of these symptoms should be remedied without delay, and Burdock Blood Bitters is the remedy upon which you may safely rely.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Hamilton, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. Kendall & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster.

Youngstown, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

Dr B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Wingham, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone it properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure ON HUMAN FLESH.

West Enosburgh, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

St. John, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
Wm. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

NATIONAL SONG.

First pledge our Queen, this solemn night,
Then drink to England's every guest,
That man's the best cosmopolite,
Who loves his native country best!
May freedom's oak for ever live,
With larger life from day to day;
That man's the true conservative
Who lops the mouldered branch away.
[illegible]
God the traitor's hope confound.
To the great cause of Freedom drink.
My friends,
And the great name of England,
Round and round,

To all the loyal hearts who long
To keep our English Empire whole!
To all our noble sons, the strong
New England of the Southern Pole!
To England under Indian skies!
To those dark millions of her realm!
To Canada, whom we love and prize,
Whatever statesmen hold the helm.
Hands all round!
God the traitor's hope confound!
To the great name of England drink,
My friends,
And all her glorious Colonies,
Round and round.

To all our statesmen, so they be
True leaders of the land's desire!
To both our Houses, may they see
Beyond the borough and the shire!
We sailed wherever ship could sail,
We founded many a mighty State!
Pray God our greatness may not fail
Through craven fears of being great.
Hands all round!
[illegible]
To the great name of England drink,
My friends,

Round and round.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

PART II.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A CHAPTER OF WONDERS.

It seems that Lord Ruysland, sitting at his window, had seen O'Donnell with Miss Herncastle on the night he followed her to Bracken Hollow. He also saw her on the night she played ghost, when she frightened Sir Peter.

The Earl told O'Donnell this, and requested him to tell him what he knew concerning this very remarkable lady.

But O'Donnell had no wish to go in league with the Earl against Miss Herncastle, and treated the matter very coolly.

The Earl told the captain that he had put a detective on her track, as he considered her a daring, dangerous woman. This awakened O'Donnell's interest, and he determined to learn all he could from the Earl, and encouraged the noble lord to uncover his plan to him.

His lordship then proceeded to tell the captain that Miss Herncastle, when she left Scarswood, booked to London but got off at the next station, and followed by the detective, walked to a place called Bracken Hollow. Davis remained all night, got wet through, and next morning came and told what he had seen.

'Next day I went to see Sir Peter, and found him determined to separate from Ginevra. I set Davis, the detective, to watch his movements for a few days.

At night Sir Peter went to Doburg's gambling house. There he was met by a visitor, who had sent in his card (which was picked up by Davis,) who wished to have a private interview. The baronet asked the visitor what had brought him to Castleford?

'I heard of this ghost story,' said he, 'besides, I want to find Mrs Vavasour. But,' continued the visitor, 'let us have a game at ecarte.'

They played till after midnight, and as they left Sir Peter said to Dubourg, 'I've won $100 from this gentleman to-night, and mean to win as much again to-morrow night.'

'Don't forget, Dantree, to-morrow night, at the Scarswood Arms, private room.'

'Dantree!, exclaimed O'Donnell, interrupting the earl, who continued the detective's story.

Next night Dantree and Sir Peter met and played for high stakes, and Sir Peter lost $40,000. Davis tracked Dantree, and this was — Bracken Hollow!!

Davis then concluded that Dantree and Helen Herncastle were one and the same.

'Impossible!' said the excited captain.

'I've seen Dr Graves,' continued the earl, 'and the result is that I believe the idiot at Bracken Hollow to be Dantree.'

'Well, next night which was last night, they played again. Dantree won $80,000. Sir Peter was nearly mad, and flew at Dantree's throat. Dantree pulled a revolver from his pocket, and held it at the baronet's head till the cheque was signed, when he pocketed both.'

'I shall cash these at the Castleford bank tomorrow,' said Dantree, 'and remember, I carry a revolver, don't you be seen out of doors.'

CHAPTER XXV.

THE LAST LINK.

On this self-same night, there arrived at Castleford station a little lady, dressed in black silk. True her dress was shabby,

She took from her breast a letter. it was signed by Lionel Cardonnel, who stated that his wife had died at Quebec, that he was on a visit to the Earl of Ruysland, and that he longed to be with her, as he was 24 years ago, and would she meet him at Bracken Hollow on the night of Aug. 8, at ten of the clock.

And so this lady—Mrs Vavasour—had come from France, and was now on her way to meet her old lover of years ago.

It was very dark and as she neared the house, she was startled by a voice, saying,

'Harriett, is that you?'

'Lionel!'

She doubted whether it was he. but he persuaded her to come with him to the house. He took off his coat, and she saw—not Lionel Cardonnell—but Otis.

'Why have you brought me here?' she cried.

'To tell me—about—the—children—you—changed—at nurse—20 years ago.'

'I know nothing of it. Let me go, or I'll—'

She never finished this sentence, for a figure had crept into the room, and the ghost of Katherine Dangerfield had made her faint in a heap right away.

'You're a useful ghost, Katherine,' said Otis to Miss Herncastle. for it was her.

At length she recovered, and Otis wrung from her a lengthy written statement, in which she confessed that she changed the babe left in her care for her own, that the Cecil fetched by the Earl of Ruysland was her own daughter and not that of the Countess who died in her arms. The countess' daughter was fancied by Colonel Dangerfield, and she was by him adopted as his own.

When she had finished, old Hannah took her to the room prepared for her and here for the present she was kept a prisoner.

Mr Otis intended to hand Harman or Vavasour over to Lord Ruysland in the morning.

He met Miss Herncastle in the passage [illegible] and said, 'The world shall know you as you are at last, but let me be the first to call you by your true name—

LADY [illegible] CLIVE.'

CHAPTER XXVI.

HUNTED DOWN.

Early next morning, only a few hours after Lord Ruysland had given him a view of his plans, came Captain O'Donnell to Bracken Hollow to warn Miss Herncastle of her danger, of those on her track.

He then told her that he had opened her grave, that he knew of Otis, of his present abode, of her playing the ghost, of her clever impersonation of Dantree, of success at ecarte, of her pointing a revolver and threatening Sir Peter.

He was terribly in earnest, and begged of her to fly while there was yet time

'It is not too late yet, as yet you have been guilty only of follies. Katherine'—her face flushed as he pronounced the name, and held out his hand; 'Katherine, for what I have said and done in the past forgive. Let me be your friend, your brother. I am taking Rose to France. Come with us. You know Rose's story, how both your lives have been wrecked by the same hand.

Katherine then went through her eventful history, she broke down at last however.

'Give up,' said O'Donnell, 'give up this dangerous way, and be true to the noble nature that Heaven has given to you.'

'I will,' she answered. 'And you,—whom I thought my enemy—shall save me. I give up the revenge. And for the love you bear her,—for your sake,—I'll spare HER.'

O'Donnell looked at her in mute astonishment.

She then told him that she had discovered her parentage, but that as another was in her place, and as her going to her father would bring shame and disgrace upon her usurper, she would not go to him.

'But right is right,' said the captain 'and even if the Earl of Ruysland were your father, and though Lady Cecil were in your place, still I say, Go, tell the truth, whatever the cost may be.'

But he saw not her secret. some men are blind.

She said that he could not love lady Cecil, or he would not speak thus of her.

'I love her and leave her.'

'But would you leave her if she was within your reach?'

'I would still leave her. Poor or rich, gentle or simple, who am I that I should marry a wife? I would not like a wife to rough a soldiers life with me.

She rose, and took from her pocket a folded paper. She then lighted a candle.

'Captain O'Donnell,' she said, 'you have done me a very great service today. I have a whimsical fancy that you should burn this.'

He read the superscription, 'Confession of Harriet Hazman.'

'What is this?' ask he.

'Something that concerns only myself.

He then held it in the flame of the candle, and reduced the document to ashes.

'I thank you, you have saved me from myself.

They parted, he to get ready to depart for France, but first to persuade Lord Ruysland not to follow her up to-day.

'Farewell,' she said softly; 'farewell for ever. If Henry Otis had been to me what you are, six years ago I had been saved.

The man who says he is not able to pay for his local newspaper ought to go at once to the County Court, and have his wife appointed his guardian. Remember that a newspaper is worth more to a family than three months' school. The family, taking a paper, live as it were in a house set upon a hill, from whose windows they can see all that is going on in the world. Do not say you are not able to pay for your paper. Say you don't like the paper. Say you would rather live in ignorance. Declare you don't want your children to learn anything. But don't say you can't pay, for that is to say you lack in true manhood, and ought to be in the poorhouse. Above all, don't borrow the paper's, that a bit mean.

I had it badly until a short time ago, but I used St. Jacob's Oil and was cured, and so can anyone be cured in a similar manner.

WARM WEATHER.

'Pretty warm,' said a farmer from Artemesia, as he called for his paper last Friday.

'What's warm?' said the man of types.

'Why, the weather.'

'What weather?'

'Why, this weather,' said the Artemesian.

'Well,' said the printer, 'how is this weather different from any other weather?'

The farmer began to get nervous, and said, 'It was warmer.'

'How do you know it is?'

The wood-cutter began to wish he had let the fixer-up of letters get on with his work, and said he hadn't heard how the—

'Isn't the weather the same everywhere?

'Why, no, some places it's warmer, and some colder.'

'What makes it so?' enquired the type-setter.

'Why, the sun,—the heat, the sun's heat.'

'Makes it colder in some places and warmer in others?' queried the literary man. 'Never heard of such a thing.

'No, no, not that,' said the Artemesia controversialist.

'Well then, what does make it colder?'

The farmer wiped his perspiring forehead, and he guessed 'it was the ice.'

'What ice?'

'Why, the ice—that—was ah—frozen by the frost.'

'Did you ever see any ice that was not frozen?' said the man of letters derisively,

'Why, no, that is, I believe I have not.'

'Then,' thundered the type-fixer, what are you talking about?'

The farmer said that he had been trying to talk about the wea—'

Just then a subscriber entered, and the farmer took advantage of this to go and open up a lively conversation with someone else about the weather.

FOUND AT MARKDALE.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

W. Nicholson, of Arran, had chattel mortgage covering his farm and farm goods held by one Mr. W. Vanduson. Nicholson decamped with a team, a colt, wagon, cow, and other articles.

Constable Briggs was set on his track, and followed him to Dobbinton, where Nicholson had vainly tried to sell the cow.

From thence he went to Desboro, the constable following him over the rough roads of Sullivan township, and at length arrived at the capital of the township.

But too late, the bird had flown to Chatsworth, whither sped the unwearied arm of the law. Again he was behind, and being sure he was on the right track, he pushed ahead to Williamsford.

Here, for a time he lost all trace of the missing one, but presently heard that Nicholson had been and thither, the Queen's representative drove after him, but here again the fugitive seemed to have eluded his pursuer.

'Finally,' says the Tara Leader, 'he procured a good subject, and after a little coaxing and several judiciously-applied drinks, Briggs got upon the right track, and accompanied by the Markdale peace-maker, he repaired to the farm of Mr Fagan, about a mile from the village.'

Here he found the team, which having secured, he went again on the war path, and found the cow on Mr. Campbell's farm. But the wagon he could nowhere find, neither the man Nicholson.

With the recovered property he set out for home, and safely arrived at Tara on Saturday, having left there the previous Tuesday.

A little boy disputing with his sister recently exclaimed: 'Tis true, for ma says so; and if ma says so it's so if it ain't so.'

'I don't mean to reflect on you,' said one man to another. 'No,' was the reply, 'you are not polished enough to reflect upon anybody.'

'I told her I'd never smoke another cigar,' he said softly, and I won't. A pipe's plenty good enough for me'—and he gracefully drew a match.

Mr. James McIntosh, of Port Elgin, has commenced shipping fruit to Prince Arthur's landing, head of Lake Superior. He sent two crates of strawberries, a quantity of currants and cherries, and as the season advances will ship all kinds of fruit.

On Sunday last Mr. James Higgs, a pensioner of the 9th Queen's Royal Lancers, threw himself into the river at Sault Ste. Marie and was drowned. The body was recovered soon afterwards. A short time ago he lost his wife, and has since been exceedingly low spirited. On Saturday he attended the marriage of his niece, and was last seen between ten and eleven o'clock in the evening. His will was executed by the Crown Attorney on the 12th inst. He was 62 years of age.

There is one young man in Arran who will not 'sit up' so late with his lady love in future. While returning home last Sunday week, pretty late at night, he was chased by a bear in Cordock's swamp. He made good use of his legs and escaped. He was so scared that his hair 'stood on end' and threw his hat off his head. He didn't stop to pick it up, either. It is said nearly all the young ladies in that section of the township have to sit up alone now, which will be a big saving to the old folks in coal oil and wood.

PUBLIC MEETING AT MARKDALE.

FIRE-ENGINE TO BE BOUGHT.

FIRE COMPANY FORMED.

THE VOLUNTEER BRIGADE.

[illegible] evening last, meeting [illegible] in the Dufferin Hall, [illegible] for the purpose of consider[illegible] [illegible] purchasing a [illegible]

Mr Edward Davis, chairman of the police trustees, was elected to preside. [illegible] that recently a gen[illegible] in the village to see the police trustees and some of the [illegible] respecting the sale of [illegible]. Of course the trustees [illegible] anything in the mat[illegible] the sanction of the rate[illegible] if they, the trustees [illegible] to levy rates for this [illegible] of the police [illegible] had convened this meet[illegible] the ratepayers, in order that the matter might be discussed, and the necessary steps taken to carry out the wishes of the ratepayers. He [illegible] invited those present to ex[illegible] their views.

[illegible] Brown, Esq., J. P., said that [illegible] first thing to be done [illegible] a committee to [illegible] resolutions to put be[illegible] so that some defi[illegible] arrived at, and the feel[illegible] obtained. This ha[illegible] in form of a motion and [illegible] Mr M[illegible], was car[illegible]

[illegible] proceeded to [illegible] to draft some [illegible]

[illegible], M.P., arose, and said [illegible] was not desirable to [illegible] meeting now that it had [illegible] in order that this [illegible] draft out resolutions [illegible] that the only thing [illegible] then was the dis[illegible] ways and means, and to [illegible] of the people as to [illegible] and what [illegible] village [illegible] young a[illegible] not see [illegible] favour [illegible] amount of tow[illegible] hands of the [illegible] they could use ei[illegible] the interests of the people. Past experience proved that in many matters councils were extravagant bodies. One councillor wanted this done in his part of the town, and another wanted that done, and thus taxes were continually going up, and never coming down. The Dr instanced Shelburne, a small place where taxes were very high, and still going higher. The other scheme—that of having a fire engine and a fire company, he entirely agreed with. A company of volunteer firemen would undoubtedly be a great benefit to the village. There had been a great many fires in Markdale; he could count eight serious fires, and might safely say that not less than $50,000 worth of property had been destroyed. True, the village had not lost that amount, for the loss had in a measure fallen on the insurance companies, nevertheless it represented the loss of so much wealth to the country, and a large [illegible] might have been saved if reasonable provision had been made for it. As to the question of how the apparatus could be obtained, that was another matter. Some said that rates could be levied for this purpose, and some said not. If it could be done by rate, so much the better, because more equitable, but if not, why let the necessary appliances be purchased by public subscription rather than go in for incorporation. It was a pity there was not a greater number present at at the meeting. Some of them would probably remember a crowded meeting they had some few years ago, when the resolution to buy an engine was lost by about 2 or 3 votes. Had it then been carried, the cost of the engine would have been saved many times over; now inertia seemed to have come over the people, and interest flagged.

Mr Brown said that he arose on a point of order. Before any discussion took place, resolutions should be before the meeting. He therefore requested those who had been named by the chairman to step forward and they would soon submit resolutions to the meeting.

No one came however, and Mr W. Brown then proposed that the police trustees be requested to set about procuring a fire engine immediately at a cost of from $120 to $150.

Mr Brown said that they had reason to regret that the resolutions referred to by Dr Sproule had been lost They had now seen the consequences of their own negligence. The speaker pointed out what Markdale would have been had the wind been in the west when Brown's saw mill was destroyed. He also spoke of the great waste of labour, and waste of water, in guarding Mr Lamb's property and the stable; whereas, had they had an engine capable of throwing water even 50 yards—just to the spot where it was most required—the greatest good could be done with the least expenditure of energy, and a big fire prevented from spreading. They wanted a well organised company, with some one at their head as captain to direct and make the most of their combined energies. He thought $120 or $150 would buy a suitable engine. As to the method of paying, all taxpayers likely to need it should be liable to share its expense. If it is for public use, surely the public should pay for it. If, however the police trustees had no power to levy a rate, then he was in favour of raising money by subscription.

Dr Sproule seconded the motion, after the clause limiting the amount to $150 had been struck out. He maintained that an engine to meet the requirements of Markdale would cost at least $250 or $300, or with plenty of hose $400.

Dr Sproule proposed that a fire company be organised, and that the trustees procure the necessary appliances for the use of the company at once.

This was seconded by Mr Brown, who spoke of the advantages of such a company, and its great value to the village. The motion was carried.

Mr Brown then spoke of the advisability of organising the company immediately. He therefore proposed that the company be formed to-night. This was seconded by Mr Grant, and carried.

The chairman then called for volunteer members of a fire company, when some twenty-four names were handed in.

A meeting of the fire company was then called for the following Tuesday evening.

After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting closed.

FIRST MEETING OF THE FIRE BRIGADE.

The first regular meeting of the fire brigade was held on Tuesday evening in the Dufferin Hall, Markdale. Mr. Wm. Brown, J. P. was elected chairman, and Mr Thomas Henry, secretary.

The business of the meeting was to organise the volunteers into a company, having the necessary officers to carry on its work systematically and [illegible].

The constitution of a similar society having been read, it was decided to build up this brigade on the same basis.

The meeting then proceeded to elect officers, which resulted as follows, there being keen contests for nearly all the offices, excitement running highest for captaincy, lieutenancy, and secretaryship.

The War News.

The first serious engagement on hand between the British troops and Arabi occurred on Saturday. A reconnaissance was made from Alexandria in strength for the purpose of determining Arabi's exact position and strength. The troops behaved with a coolness and courage that would have delighted the heart of Wellington. The action, which was gallantly and successfully fought, brought forth numerous deeds of bravery which redound to the credit of the British Army. Our loss was small—four killed and less than thirty wounded. The only officer killed was Lieut. Vyse. of the 60th Rifles, a promising young officer, who is highly spoken of by general Allison.

FARM TRANSFERS.

SOME BIG PRICES.

Maitland sold a fifty-acre farm in Pilkington, to Johnston, for $2,650.

Grey sold a farm of 160 acres, West Oxford, to W. Francis for $9,920, being $62 per acre.

Andrew Bell sold his farm of 100 acres, Vespra, to James Kirk, for $7,000 cash. Mr. Bell reserves two acres, and two dwelling houses.

John Maitland sold his farm, in Nichol, composed of 110 acres, for $6,000.

Mrs. Jame Chesney has sold her farm, Tuckersmith, to F. Elliott, of Westminster, for $6,000. The farm contains 100 acres, 90 of which are cleared.

MARKDALE CATTLE FAIR.

The cattle fair last Monday was fairly attended, considering the season of the year—most of the farmers being engaged at the fall wheat harvesting.

Quite a number of cattle were on the ground, many of which changed hands at good prices. Several head of cattle arrived too late.

Farmers and others intending to make sales of cattle would do well to have them on the ground not later than 9 o'clock, as buyers calculate on having their purchases all made before 11, and take their drove away forthwith.

CHATSWORTH.

It is understood that Mr Hopkins will build a large brick hotel on the site of the one recently burned down here.

Although it was at first denied that the Bain property was insured, it turns out otherwise.

Our citizens should provide themselves with a fireengine of some kind; and that manufactured by Mr John Dobbin, of Owen Sound, is probably the best that could be had at a reasonable price. Mr Dobbin was out here last week trying to effect a sale, but a number of the property owners seem to be very indifferent about it. This is great short-sightedness, for as they are at present fixed they can do little or nothing in the way of preventing fire from spreading. Some of our best buildings are attached to rows of miserable barrack, and the one is sure to suffer with the other.

The Holland show will be held here Tuesday, Oct. 10. The number of members is greater than in any previous year.

The next sitting of the Division Court will be held here on Thursday, Oct. 26, 12.30.

Insurance agents are doing a good business in the village since the fire. The number of buildings not insured previous to that disaster was something startling.

Mr McGill has sold upwards of 200 horse rakes this season, and they are still in demand.

The directors of the Holland show have their eye on a certain farmer of the township. Said farmer is charged with having shewn the same bushel of Deihl wheat at the show for a number of years, taking first money every time. To put the directors off their guard, he occasionally lends it to a friend, who shews it for him. Last year a neighbour shewed it, and took first prize; this year it is expected he will shew it himself.

One day last week while Mrs Ronalds and Mrs McNea of Markdale were on their way home from Mr J. Merriman's, where they had been cherry-picking, were thrown from the buggy whilst turning Mathews' corner on con. 2, and narrowly escaped being seriously injured. The buggy was upset and both ladies thrown out, one of them very near a large stone which lay by the roadside. After running a few rods the horse got rid of the buggy and started homeward, but was soon stopped. Beyond a few slight injuries to one of the ladies, the shafts of the buggy, and the general scattering of a large basket of cherries the damage done was slight.

METHODIST GARDEN PARTY.

The garden party at the Methodist parsonage on Monday evening was very largely attended. The grounds were encircled with evergreens, on which were hung several dozen Chinese and other lanterns, which gave the place a magnificent appearance; the illumination could be seen from almost any part of the village. The dining apartment was well patronised, and had to be replenished with fresh supplies from the bakers long before all were served.

Ice cream and lemonade were disposed of readily. The organ and piano were each surrounded by a throng who discoursed many popular airs, which were evidently highly appreciated by the company. The Rev. Mr. McDiarmid and his amiable wife did all in their power in providing enjoyment for those present, and were eminently successful.

About 250 were present, and the net proceeds amounted to $[illegible].

A FLOWER IN A DEAD BABY'S HAND.

After a young child had died and had been laid in its casket, in Auburn, a few days ago, a rosebud was plucked from a neighbouring garden and the stem was placed in one of the lifeless little hands. A day or two elapsed between this incident and the funeral ceremony. In the interval the rosebud in the hand of clay was seen to gradually unfold. When the service was held the bud had become a blossom. The phenomenon gave peculiar pleasure to the afflicted family, and was very prettily referred to by the clergyman, who compared the unfolding of the rosebud to the blossoming in heaven of the child.

He also shook $5 in the faces of all present that he could throw a filled barrel of salt weighing 300 lbs. over his head with his teeth, but found no takers.

Good cows are scarce enough at the best, and it is a pity to see choice milkers given over to milk men, with a certainty that not only will their progeny never help perpetuate the race of choice cows, but that they also will after a few years at most, be lost to the dairy interest of the country. When a farmer gets one of the best cows he should hold on, or if for any reason he finds it advisable to sell, let him sell to some brother farmer who will keep the cow as a breeder, and not sacrifice her to this modern Moloch of the bovine race.

SCIENTIFIC.

[illegible] has recently obtained, by the aid of his spectroscope of high dispersive power, a solar protuberance whose height equalled [illegible] of the diameter of the sun or about 55,000 miles.

GAS HEAT.—A recent course of experiments made to determine the heating power of gas shows that one cubic foot of ordinary sixteen-candle coal gas will develop 575 heat units, while water gas will give only about 187 heat units per cubic foot.

FOOD AND WORK.—In order to perform an amount of mechanical work equal to lifting 140 pounds 10,000 feet high, Prof. Graham calculates that a man must eat five pounds of potatoes, one and a third pound flour, two and a third pounds bread, one and a quarter pound oatmeal, one and a third pound rice, three and a half pounds lean beef, half a pound beef fat or one and a fifth pound Cheshire cheese. He says that the peasants of all countries have been right, in spite of many scientific assertions that they were wrong, in their instinctive habit of adding fat rather than nitrogenous food to their diet when undergoing hard work.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.—Mr. Sawyer, of New York City, who fairly divides with Mr. Edison the public attention in connection with the problem of lighting by electricity, gave an exhibition of his latest achievement in this line a few evenings ago. Seven lights were burning, says a reporter, giving out a steady, soft, pleasant light which was declared by an expert to be the best he had ever seen. The electricity was furnished by a four-horse power engine. The intensity of one of the lights was easily regulated by means of a "switch" without apparently affecting the others. The new lamp is based upon the incandescence of a pencil of carbon in nitrogen, the hermetical sealing of the globe being made with a newly discovered compound. The pencil, seven inches long, will last, it is asserted, three months at least, if used only five hours a day, and can be replaced at a cost of about fifteen cents.

THE NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS.—M. Faye has recently shown, in an interesting paper in the Comptes Rendus, how the celebrated hypothesis of Laplace, which at one time gained general assent, has been affected by the progress of modern discovery. The principal point is that of the direction of rotation of planets and their satellites. Laplace believed this direction to be the same for all the stars of the solar system, and the supposition of rings being detached from the primitive nebula, as it contracted, renders this condition quite necessary. But it is now known that this is not always the case, for the satellites of Uranus and those of Neptune have a retrograde motion. The hypothesis also required that the satellites should perform their revolution in longer time than the planet took to rotate on its axis. Now the recently-discovered satellites of Mars do not obey this law. Lastly, M. Faye insists on the fact that the very possibility of formation of successive rings has never been proved. Hence it is necessary, he claims, to abandon a part of Laplace's theory. M. Faye intends shortly to present a new way of looking at this important subject.

PETROLEUM IN RUSSIA.—It is likely that the European demand for petroleum will before long be largely supplied by the deposits of this oil in Hanover and Russia. The beds in the latter country are comparatively boundless, extending for a distance of 1,500 miles along the Caucasus range, from the Caspian to the Black Sea. At the present time, however, there are but two districts in this large area where any systematic efforts are being made to obtain petroleum. One is in the valley of the Kuban river (which flows into the Black Sea), where two wells have been sunk by a French company under the superintendence of an American manager; this company has a refinery at Taman. The other and most productive district is near Baku, on the Caspian Sea. Many wells have been sunk here to the depth of 300 feet, having a daily yield of 28,000 barrels of crude petroleum. An extraordinary amount of sand flows out with the oil, and is heaped up near the orifice of the wells in banks at least thirty feet high. Large refineries exist at Baku, though the refined oil at present produced there is not so good as that in this country.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—Some experiments made at Riga with reference to the spontaneous combustion of various materials, wadding, raw flax, hemp, the waste of silk, wool and cotton spinning, also sponge, as well as the wood-dust found in the cabinet-makers' shops, appear to demonstrate the important fact, among others, that small quantities really take fire sooner than large ones. The substances named were saturated with various fluids—oils, turpentine, petroleum, various varnishes, etc. All the fibrous materials took fire when saturated with any of these oils, or with mixtures of the same; sponge and wood-dust, on the contrary, proved to be entirely harmless. Combustion ensued most rapidly with 17 grains of wadding, and 67 grains of a strong oil varnish, namely, in thirty-seven minutes, while 200 grains of washed cotton waste, of which a portion was saturated with 750 grains of strong oil varnish and the remainder wrapped about it, required a period of well nigh fourteen hours. On these materials being placed in a well-sheltered spot and subjected to a heat of from 18 to 40 degrees C., silk did not flame up, but slowly charred; and, as already mentioned, small quantities seemed to take fire sooner than large.

CARNIVOROUS PLANTS.—When insects are caught by plants, it is assumed, and with much apparent reason, that the act is, for some purpose, directly connected with the plants' own good. In some cases the plants seem to have special adaptations calculated to allure insects to destruction; and Mr. Darwin has shown that some plants have digestive acids connected with leaf-glands, by which nitrogenous substances may be absorbed. The area of these curious observations is being continually widened, and now Le Horticole Belgique announces that the pineapple and many other bromeliaceous plants have been discovered to be "carnivorous." Many plants of this order are Epiphytes, attaching themselves to trees or rocks, and deriving most of their sustenance from the atmosphere, through their leaves. In a large number of species the leaves clasp the stem tightly, and form small cups, which always have water in them, condensed from the dews or held from rain; and in tropical forests these little cups of water are said to be always filled with insects, which putrify in the liquid and thus aid in nourishing the plant. The Belgian paper is alluding to these discoveries from the practical standpoint, and recommends those who are cultivating this extensive and beautiful tribe of plants, either for the fruit, as the pineapple, or for the foliage or flowers, to take the hint from Nature. Under glass the plant is practically shut off from insect food; but the editor thinks a fair substitute for meat soup may be offered by dropping a little carbonate of ammonia into the water in the leaf-cups.

A THRILLING ESCAPE.

An overhanging rock just below Kanawha Falls was the scene of a remarkable adventure, which the Louisville Courier-Journal describes as follows:

The Indians were in hot pursuit of Van Bibber, a settler and man of distinction in those early times. He was hard pressed, and all access to the river below and above being cut off, he was driven to this jutting rock, which proved to be the jumping-off place for him.

He stood on the rock, in full view of the enemy above and below, who yelled like demons at the certainty of his speedy capture.

He stood up boldly, and with his rifle kept them at bay. As he stood there he looked across the river—saw his friends—his wife with her babe in her arms, all helpless to render assistance. They stood as if petrified with terror and amazement.

She cried at the top of her voice, "Leap into the river and meet me!"

Laying her babe on the grass, she seized the oars and sprang into the skiff alone.

As she neared the middle of the river, her husband saw the Indians coming in full force and yelling like demons.

"Wife, wife," he screamed. "I'm coming; drop down a little lower."

With this he sprang from his crag and descended like an arrow into the water, feet foremost.

The wife rested on her oars a moment to see him rise to the surface, the little canoe floating like a cork, bobbing about on the boiling flood.

It was an awful moment: it seemed an age to her. Would he ever rise?

Her earnest gaze seemed to penetrate the depths of the water, and she darted her boat farther down the stream.

He rose near her; in a moment the canoe was alongside of him, and she helped him to scramble into it amid a shower of arrows and shot that the baffled Indians poured into them.

The daring wife did not speak a world, her husband was more dead than alive, and all depended on her strength being maintained until they could reach the bank.

This they did, just where she had started, right where the babe was still lying, crowing and laughing.

The men pulled the skiff high up on the sand, and the wife slowly arose and helped to lift Van Bibber to his feet.

He could not walk, but she laid him down by his babe, and then seating herself, she wept wildly just as any other woman would have done under the circumstances.

That babe is now a grandfather, and that rock is called "Van Bibber's Rock" to this day.—Youth's Companion.

"TASTED DRETFUL QUEER."

We have heard of people curing others of using strong drink by putting an emetic into their whiskey-bottles. The following story illustrates the wedding manners of seventy years ago, and the simplicity of a green young benedict:

A minister of Newburyport was once called up, after he had gone to bed, to marry a couple. The hour was late, and the minister's wife did not rise to witness the ceremony, but gave her husband particular directions for the entertainment of the wedding guests.

"Don't forget to pass the cake and wine, doctor," said she. "The cake is in the corner cupboard, and you'll find the wine on the third right-hand shelf in the sideboard.

The doctor promised obedience, put on his clothes, and went down to perform the ceremony. Returning a half-hour later, he found his wife sitting up in bed, with an anxious expression on her face. "Doctor," she cried, "did you give them any wine?"

"Certainly, my dear, just as you told me."

"Not from the decanter on the third shelf of the sideboard?"

"That is exactly where you directed me to find it, wife."

"Dear! dear! Did they drink much of it?"

"Why, yes; they emptied their glasses."

"What shall we do! Doctor, I made a mistake—it was ipecac wine you gave them. Oh, how sick they must be. Do, dear, put on your cloak and go right after them; they can't have got far."

The doctor found the bridal party at the corner of the next street. "What made you drink the wine?" he asked. "Couldn't you tell by the taste that there was something wrong about it?"

The bridegroom answered, between his qualms: "She whispered to me that it tasted dretful queer, but I told her 'twas because we was gettin' married!"

EFFECTS OF ELECTRICITY.

"Dis is de age ob 'lectricity," said the Rev. Plato Johnson the other evening as our reporter sat with him on the doorstep of his humble cottage, "an' though we oughter be proud ob it, still to my shaller mind de age ob lightnin' has its drawbacks." The old gentleman seemed lost in thought for a moment, mechanically drawing a large bandana from his capacious pocket and wiping his ample brow. The reporter, who has made a study of the moods of our simple-hearted friend, did not interrupt his reverie, but waited patiently for possible revelations. "It's all berry well," he continued after a little, "it's all berry well to coax de lightnin' from de clouds, but after you've got it you gotter look out for it pretty lively. Now, you kin tame de wildest hoss so he will almos' forgit how to kick; but, bress de Lord, de lightnin' nebber forgits nothin', an' is allers lookin' roun' for a chance ter hit somebody. You got to keep yer eye on it all de time, an' even den yer can't be sure it won't go off on a 'scursion an' kill free or four people, an' be back agin fore yer can wink twice. It is one ob dose tings it won't nebber do to let run loose roun' de house. Well, if it stepped roun' sorter slow, you know, so you could git out der way, dat would be a defferent ting, but de trubble is dat it is so orfle quick tempered, an' wen it trabbles it trabbles so fass dat you is stone dead an' yer house all burned down to de ground 'fore you can cry 'Fire!' Sech a fluid as dat musn't be fooled wid. Now, lass week, wen I was down to York, I went to call on Brudder Edison. I'se had a rheumatis orfle bad, and dey said I ought ter try 'lectricity. Brudder Edison tole me he could handle de 'lectricity jess as easy as though he was a lightnin' rod, an' it wouldn't do him no harm. He said I could learn to do it too, but wen I tried it I foun' I hadn't learned much, or dat sumfin was wrong. De only wonder is dat I didn't die learnin'. Wy, I couldn't even holler to tole him to take de plaguey ting away an' le' me go home. I nebber wanted to go home so much in my life. Wen I look at dat machine it look innercent 'nuff. Der want nothin' de matter wid it dat I could see to object to. But jes like pore Brudder [illegible] —N. Y. Herald.

WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Biliousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Biliousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys.

Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Biliousness.

FATAL BOAT ACCIDENT.

FOUR BOYS DROWNED

AT A

PICNIC PLEASURE PARTY.

Yesterday (Wednesday) the pleasure of a picnic party near Brewster's Lake was sadly marred by a fatal accident occurring on the Lake.

It seems that four boys, named Huston, Wisdom and two brothers named Miles, from Maxwell went out either for a row, or for fishing on the Lake, while they were on the water, either through too many of them standing up or through them crowding on one side of the boat, it capsized, and the result was that they were all thrown overboard into the water. None of the four boys named were able to reach the shore or otherwise save themselves, and before they could be rescued they were drowned.

A gloom was thus cast over the pleasure of the party.

At a special meeting of the Dominion Millers' Association on Thursday in Toronto, the resolution of last year declaring that the Government should allow the miller to export the equivalent in flour of wheat imported from the United States, instead of the product of that particular wheat, was again passed, and a deputation [illegible] appointed to urge this view on the government. The system of [illegible] was strongly condemned.

The mystery hanging over the fate of the coloured Baptist preacher and his wife, supposed to have been murdered [illegible] East and [illegible] has been cleared up This day by their appearance in their own [illegible] persons at the celebration of the anniversary of the West Indies emancipation in Chatham. It appears they got frightened at some threats made by neighbours against them, and fled to Chatham.

At Bowmansville, near Chicago, a Congregational church organized and ordained a pastor. The council was at first puzzled what to do in the matter, as all the church but the pastor and a boy of fifteen years were females. They put the matter through to a conclusion, however, deaconesses being elected. The Chicago Tribune, in closing its report of the proceedings pertinently asks, "Where are the men?"

A melancholy fatal accident took place at Algiers on Friday, 28th July. Lar[illegible] Tulloch and his brother-in-law James Howick were splicing a piece of rope on the floor of the saw mill of Messrs. Williams and Murry, of Goderich, when they were both killed by the bursting of a new pulley. Tulloch never breathed, Howick lived till one o'clock in the afternoon, but never was conscious. Both men leave widows and small children to mourn their loss. The bodies were taken to their homes ten miles up the Mississagua on Saturday and buried on Sabbath afternoon. Rev J. Nicol preached a funeral sermon to a large crowd of sympathizing friends. This sudden accident has cast quite a gloom over the entire neighbourhood. The deceased were respected by all who knew them.

A [illegible] had been invited to [illegible] and was to preach his [illegible] sermon in anticipation of a call. At the house of a leading member, where he stopped, his host said [illegible]

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

The proprietors of the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway are dissatisfied with the subsidy offered by the Dominion Government.

Those affected with weak lungs, sluggish liver, or derangement of the kidneys, should procure a package of Dr Carson's Liver and Lung Compound. Each 50 cent package makes three pints of Syrup. It is a valuable collection of roots, herbs, and barks, and its results are wonderful. For sale by all druggists. Turner, agent, Markdale; Parsons, agent, Dundalk.

A Markdalite visiting the Zoo trod on the alligator's tail to see if he was alive. It was, and the Glenelger soon found himself in the pond, having been whisked thither by the caudal appendage of the reptile. He respects the alligator's tail, and stands clear.

An honest medicine is the noblest work of man, and we can assure our readers that Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry is not only reliable, but is almost infallable to cure Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Canker of the Stomach and bowels, and the various Summer Complaints, whose attacks are often sudden and fatal.

Kelly, proprietor of the Tuam Herald, has been prosecuted under the Prevention of Crimes Act for publishing an article encouraging murder.

There would be little or no sickness during the hot months of July and August if every one would take Dr Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, as they prevent and cure all derangements of the stomach and bowels Sold in large bottles at 50 cents by all druggists. Turner, Markdale: Parsons, Dundalk.

It is understood that the Hon. Frank Smith has been sworn in as member of Privy Council without portfolio, Hon. D. L. Macpherson becoming President of the Council.

The Wild Strawberry plant possesses rare virtue as a cleansing, cooling, astringent, anteseptic, and healing medicine, and when combined with other valuable vegetable extracts, as in Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, it is an unfailing remedy in all Bowel complaints.

Immigration returns from Emerson Man., up to the end of June show that up to that time upwards of forty thousand people had entered Manitoba this season.

Davy & Clark, Druggists, Renfrew, write us June 3rd. "We have sold Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for a number of years, and find nothing equal to it, for the purpose for which it is designed." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cures all kinds of Bowel complaints incident to Summer and Fall.

It is uncertain at present whether Thunder Bay section of the Canada Pacific will be opened this season. At present the road is in the hands of the contractor, who refuses to allow trains to pass over it.

The firm of J. & S. McEachen, Douglas, writes us June 1st, saying, "There is not another preparation we can recommend with so much confidence as Burdock Blood Bitters, as it invariably gives the best of satisfaction." Burdock Blood Bitters cures all diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys.

'What can I do for you to induce you to go to bed, now? asked a Lowell mama of her five-year-old boy Monday evening. 'You can let me set up a little longer,' was the youngster's response.

As a remedy for Sea Sickness, for any irritation of the stomach and bowels, for canker of the stomach and mouth, for piles and hemorrage, and for all varieties of bowel complaints, Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is nature's true specific.

A whole family were poisoned last week by eating strawberries that had been grown near some currant bushes on which some hellibore had been sprinkled.

W. H. Crooker, Druggist, of Waterdown, under date of June 1st, writes that "Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cannot be surpassed, when all other remedies fail then it comes to the rescue, and I find the sales large and increasing." Wild Strawberry positively cures all Bowel complaints.

A melancholy affair happened at Ayton in connection with the excursion at the opening of the new railway to the Georgian Bay. Among the returning excursionists were a mother and daughter named Drummond. All went well till Ayton station had been passed a short distance, when the mother fell off the platform on which they had been standing. The daughter jumped to her assistance and fell underneath the wheels of the car. She was instantly killed. The mother was seriously injured

BILIOUSNESS.

A furred tongue, bad taste in the mouth, nausea vomiting, variable appetite, alternate diarrhœa and costiveness, faintness, weariness, yellow cast of eyes and countenance, indicates serious biliary trouble. Jaundice is a dangerous disease, it is an overflow of bad bile in the circulation, any of these symptoms should be remedied without delay, and Burdock Blood Bitters is the remedy upon which you may safely rely.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, MO., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & CO.—Gents: —This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

Dr. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents: —I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial. I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

[illegible], Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. [illegible] Co., Gents: This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, [illegible], Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone if properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure

ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST [illegible], Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents: —Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P.Q. Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents: —I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, scalds and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

AN APOLOGY.

For Gazing at a Young Lady at Markdale Church.

The sermen was long,
And the preacher was prosy;
Do you think it was wrong?
The sermon was long.
The temptation was strong,
Her cheeks were so rosy,—
The sermon was long,
The preacher was prosy;
Her cheeks were so rosy.

FARMING.

What is farming?
Is it ploughing?
Is it digging with a spade?
Is it reaping?
Is it sowing?
Call you this the farmer's trade.

Sturdy frame,
Inured to labour,
Sinewy and horny hands.
Is this all,
All you require,
In the culture of your lands?

Mind must be
Well yoked to labor;
Man must think as well as toil!
If with profit,
If with pleasure,
He would cultivate the soil.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

PART II.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THAT NIGHT.

Three hours later, and Redmond and Rose O'Donnell had quitted Scarswood Park for ever.

They had bid adieu to Lady Dangerfield, weeping feebly; to Lady Cecil, who gave her hand-clasp to him, and a look which plainly said, Farewell, for ever—my love. To Lord Ruysland, who stood aghast at O'Donnell's request to leave Miss Hernecastle alone for one day at least, when he would write the Earl all he had learned of this wonderful woman, this mystery.

O'Donnell then took his sister to Bracken Hollow. She there saw her husband—Gaston Dantree—an idiot; he was asleep. The sight was too much for her, she fainted in her brother's arms.

He met with Otis, who was in a great rage inasmuch as Katherine had fled, no one knew whither. For this he blamed O'Donnell, and referred him to a letter she had left for Otis, in which she said that for her own sake she could not go with Captain O'Donnell and his sister. None of them were to follow or seek her. She was gone for the best, she said, and all would be well.

Otis said that he would proclaim the secret of her parentage, and would tell him, (meaning Earl Ruysland) at once.

The captain did not yet know what relationship existed between Katherine and the Earl,

O'Donnell hurried off to the Silver Rose. The baggage was ready, but Lanty's whereabonts could be best known by the sound of his voice, there was no mistaking that.

'See now—that I may niver sin—but I'll come back to ye—an' maybe marry ye—if I don't see anybody I'd like betther. Arrah where's the gude ov cryin an screechin in this way? My own heart's broke intoirely. An thin ye kin write me in your own illigant hand. Faith, an ye write aquil to any schoolmaster in Ballanybaggart. An ye'il dait yer lethers in this way, 'Mr Lanty Lafferty, in care ov the Maisther, in furrin parts.' Arrah, hould yer noise an' don't be afther feitchin' the parish down cn us.'

Susan and Lanty were behind the pump, her reply to this love speech being only audible in Lanty Laffertys ear.

'Why dont I lave him is it? Upon me conscience, it's long and many's the time ago I'd have left him wid his sodgerin an thrampin if I could have iver a dacent Irish boy to trust him wid. But if a bullet from a rifle, or a poke from a pike were to cut short his sodgerin I'd be allus to the fore to close the corpse's eyes. An its on me two knees I'd go to ye this minute me darlin av it wasn't owin to the dampness ov the grass, an the rheumatiz that's afther troublin me in the small ov me back. I'd ax ye iv ye wouldnt be Misthress Lafferty. An faith it's not to more lhan half a dozen women I'd say the like.

'Lanty! I say, come along!' called his master.

'Och! tare an ages! there he is himself. Give us a kiss, Shusan, me darlin ov the wurruld. Long life to ye till I come back to ye me own tru love.

They were soon in the quiet hotel in London.

O'Donnell wrote to Earl Ruysland and laid before him the accumulated evidence which proved Miss Hernecastle and Katherine Dangerfield oneand the same.

He said that her sins had been forced upon her, that her virtues were her own, and he asked the earl to befriend the lady he was recently hunting down.

The earl obeyed O'Donnell, and did not continue to follow the track of the ex-governess.

As O'Donnell returned from the post office, he was met at the door of the hotel by a telegraph boy, waiting with a cable message from New Orleans:—

To Redmond O'Donnell.—My wife and son are dead. Come at once and bring Rose. L. De Lansac.

This cablegram altered the whole course of the rest of Captain O'Donnell's life.

* * * *

Lord Ruysland, walking around the big fish-pond, was thinking of the great changes that had recently occurred when he was approached by Mr Otis.

The earl heard impatiently the story about Katherine being his daughter, but disbelieved it, and told Otis that he was a lunatic.

Lady Cecil was within earshot, and at once saw that she was after all the daughter of a guilty, scheming woman,—Harriett Harman,—and had no right to name of which she was so proud.

Just then a bright light lit up the horizon.

Bracken Hollow was on fire! Old Hannah was busy attending Harman and the idiot, Gaston, had got the matches, and carried out his oft-repeated threat.

Dantree got to the top of the building, and fell with it, and perished in the flames,

Harriett Harman was locked up in her room. In bursting open the door she was knocked down and nearly killed.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HUNTED DOWN.

Dying! No earthly aid could reach her! The blow of the heavy door had done its work.

The earl had thought over what Otis had said. He went to the Silver Rose where Harriet Harman lay dying. Thither followed him Lady Cecil. She had heard all the news, and was anxious to see the woman said to be her mother.

They got to her bedside, and as consciousness returned, the earl spoke to her.

'Harriet, do you know me?'

'Yes, my lord,—I do, I—I— am—sorry—'

'Listen, Harriet,—speak the truth now. Was it your child—your own child—you gave me 20 years ago, or mine?'

'It was mine.—I swear it. I kept yours. I hated my lady. I swore revenge. She parted me from Lionel! Lionel.'

Lord Ruysland took her hand and bent close.

'Harriet, look at this face beside me—It is the child you gave me. Tell me again—is she yours or mine? I love her.'

'She is—mine, Katherine Harman. Yours I gave to Sir John Dangerfield—Her grave is in Castleford churchyard, and—I—saw her,—saw her!—two days ago!'

Lord Ruysland looked across to Mr Otis.

'She saw Helen Hernecastle, said that individual.

They left the room, and Lady Cecil fainted.

When they returned to Scarswood the earl had ample time to think over the whole affair, and weigh the evidence.

It was all clear. No room for any doubt. No point he could dispute. He recalled the picture of Lionel Cardonnell in the possession of the governess—her interest in the story—the very strong likeness to his own dead wife, the ghost, and the resmblance to Katherine Dangerfield were explained easily now.

What a bold game she had played! And Treganna had fallen in love with her! He had parted them. Had compelled him to propose to Harmans daughter.

His daughter lived—had relented at the eleventh hour—had burned the confession—returned Sir Peter his money—renounced her retribution—and gone into the world alone to fight the bitter battle—her battle—of life.

'Oh God,' cried the earl, as he realised her position, 'this is the hardest to bear of all.'

The conclusion of this story will be found on page 2, of this issue.

THAT KISSING CASE.

The Rev. Mrs Starr, nee Miss Graham, undertook more than she had bargained for when she voluntarily brought herself before the public by unenviable means.

The rev. gentleman's church at Winnipeg is crowded weekly by the curious, who go not to hear the gospel but to see the young lady who sent over the wires to a forbidden and an alien party to "come and have a heavenly time.'

The young lady has gained for herself a notoriety for life, and brought a scandal upon the church.

In case of moral offenders the conference generally relegates them for a season to some distant settlement. We know of one young Methodist divine who openly traded horses as a business, and on the evening before his wedding day he sent a successful representative who broke off the engagement.

On the following day he drove to a neighbouring village, and married another girl forthwith.

The conference quietly took cognizance of the affair, and for a number of years the young divine has been labouring harmlessly among the scattered residents of the regions about Lake Huron where scandal travels slowly,

MARRIAGE COMPLICATIONS.

Queer complications grow out of the marriage of the Duke of Westminster. The duke's daughter Beatrice married the eldest son of Lord Chesham, and has borne him a son and heir. Now, the Duke himself has married Lord Chesham's sister.

The Chesham boy, born in 1878, is the nephew of his new grandmother, who is his father's sister, consequently his grandfather is his uncle.

His father being his uncle's son, is his cousin. His mother is also his cousin. Hence he is his own second cousin. His father being his grandmother's brother, is his son's great-uncle.

DEATH IN THE PULPIT.

The Rev. Mr Gerrie, Baptist minister, while officiating on Sunday at the Baptist church on the Communication line in the township of Smith for his son-in-law Rev. Mr. Radcliffe, suddenly fell dead while giving out a hymn. Mr Gerrie had resided some years ago at Elora.

THE LUCKY BOY.

Some men begin to be lucky when they are mere boys. A 12-year old boy shot at a cat in Leadville last week, but fortunately missed the cat but killed an influential citizen, who was asleep in the back yard of a neighbouring saloon.

As the influential citizen happened to be a delegate from Texas, who had killed several men, and of whom the Leadville police had a holy horror, the joy of the citizens was great indeed.

The boy received an ovation. The mayor made a neat speech in presenting him with a gold-mounted revolver. As the boy expresed a desire to join the minstry, he was sent to theological institute.

Nothing, however, has ever been done for the cat.

CAUGHT.

A South Grey farmer who sent 25 cents for sure cure for the potato bug evil was told to select two small flat pieces of wood, catch the bug and lay it carefully on piece of wood No 1, press firmly till the bug is gathered to his fathers.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

The Flesherton Cheese Factory is flourishing. Most of the farmers in the neighbourhood send their milk to the factory, and thus get out of all the hard dairy work. The manager has disposed of the May and June make of cheese for 10½ cents per lb. This is a good price for cheese made in the months named. The buyer pronounced it good.

The Laurel Cheese Factory is going ahead. A large amount of milk is coming in weekly, 82 tons and 195lb. being made into cheese in one week. The demand for cheese is good, it fetches 10½c.

We see no reason why Markdale should not possess a cheese factory. Besides the fact that it would employ a certain number of hands, we know that it would be the means of bringing the farmers and their wives oftener into the town.

PAT AND THE SERMON.

'That was a good sermon, was it not, that he had last Sunday?'

'True, for you, yer honour, an illigant one! It done me a power of good.'

'I am glad of that can you tell me what particular struck you? What was it about?'

'Oh, well,' scratching his head, "I don't rightly—not just exactly know. I—a—I. A' where's the use in telling lies. Sure I don't remember one single 'dividual word of it, good or bad. Sorra a bit of me knows what it was about at all.'

'And yet you say it did you a power of good.'

'So it did sir. I'll stick to that.'

'I don't see how.'

'Well, now, yer honor, look here. There's my shirt that the wife is after washing; and clean and white it is, by reason of all the water, and all the soap that's going through it. But not a drop of 'em all—water, or soap, or blue has stayed in, d'ye see? And that's just the same with me and that sermon. It's run through me, yer honour, and it's dried out of me; but all the same, just like my Sunday shirt, I'm the better and the cleaner after it.

SLEEPERS.

A sleeper is one who sleeps. A sleeper is that in which the sleeper sleeps. A sleeper is that on which the sleeper which carries the sleeper while he sleeps runs. Therefore while the sleeper sleeps in the sleeper the sleeper carries the sleeper over the sleeper under the sleeper until the sleeper which carries the sleeper jumps off the sleeper and wakes the sleeper on the sleeper by striking the sleeper under the sleeper, and there is no sleeper in the sleeper on the sleeper.

TELEPHONING FOR THE WRONG DOCTOR.

A well-known medical man of Detroit was called up by telephone the other day, when the following conversation took place:

'It has come, doctor.'

The doctor thought he knew the voice, and, wondering why he had not been sent for, snouted back:

'Is it all right?'

'It's a very small pattern,' answered the voice, which was that of a woman, 'but it will do if we take pains.'

The doctor caught the last word, and called distinctly:.

'Give it paregoric.'

There was a mumbling discussion which he could not hear, and then the voice called:

'Is this Doctor——?'

'No! It's Doctor——of Forest street.'

Then he heard a chorus of mirth, and was informed that he was in communication with a fashionabl dressmaking house, and it was a silk dress for Doctor——'s wife that was under discussion, and that he was the wrong man, which under the circumstances was rather a relief to the Fort street physician.

EUPHRASIA.

The council met pursuant to adjournment, Aug, 4, 1882.

Members all present.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

The report of committee on collector's roll, E. div. of township accepted and collector requested to settle up with the treasurer for 1880 roll before next meeting.

Mr Erskine was authorised to act as he may deem prudent with J. McNeely with reference to work on the roads.

Watson & McLaren's ac. laid over for information.

Reeve and Mr Ellis to examine 3 & 4 sideroad, con. 6, and report at next meeting.

The Reeve, Mr Fawcett, & Mr Ellis were appointed a committee to examine assets and liabilities of the township, and ascertain what rate will be required for current year.

After a little deliberation they reported that a 1 cent on the $ would be necessary.

School debenture rates and amount to be raised as the school sections require.

By-law 320 was passed,

The following amounts were orderd to be paid:

R. Helstropy, 6 chairs	...	$3.90

John Millar „	...	$2.60
R. Neely „	...	$19.00
Js. Stinson „	...	$20.00

Moved by Mr Erskine, seconded by Mr Gilray that this council very much regrets that the trustees of certain public schools within this township have omitted to make their requisition to the council for the levy of school moneys according to law, thereby leaving themselves liable to heavy fines, and making themselves personally liable for teachers' salaries. The trustees of the following school sections being those in default, viz:

SATIRE.

A London engraver has issued cartoon representing Gladstone disguising himself as Beaconsfield, in order to terrify Arabi and the European Powers.

He has already placed a primrose in his button hole and a curl on his forehead, and is shown in the act of pasting a goatee to his chin. Under his arm he carries a rifled cannon, while in the background are reserve soldier and Sepoy.

SUMMER DRINKS.

To make root beer, take a quantity of sarsaparilla roots an sassafras bark and some hops, and boil till the strength is extracted. to three gallons of the liquor, after it is strained, add one quart of molasses and a quart of yeast. After standing in a warm place eight or ten hours, strain again and bottle. It will be fit for use the following day.

For ginger-beer, take one pint of molasses and two spoonfuls of ginger; put into a pail to be half filled with boiling water; when well stirred together fill the pail with cold water, leaving room for one pint of yeast, which must not be put in till luke warm, place it on the warm hearth for the night. And bottle it in the morning.

For spruce beer, take three pounds of sugar, four gallons of water, one ounce of ginger, a little lemon peel or essence of lemon, and a little essence of spruce, to give it flavour. Stir all together, warm it a trifle; add a cupful of good yeast.

Mead is made by dissolving one part of honey in three of boiling water, flavouring it with spice, and adding a portion of ground malt and a piece of toast steeped in yeast, allowing the whole to forment.

INQUIRIES FOR MAIL.

ALWAYS MUST BE LETTERS.

One of the oddest sights in the south is to see the negroes hang about the post-office. They are the first ones to call in the morning and the last to leave at night, and it is by no means rare to have them inquire for mail ten or fifteen times a day. I was in the office at Marietta, Ga., when an aged darkey limped in and inquired:

'Am dar' fo' or five letters for June broke Duke?'

'No, sir,' replied the postmaster, after taking a look.

'Woll, den, I'll take one.'

'There are no letters for you.'

'Isn't dar a newspaper?'

'No.'

'Hasn't I dun got nuffin' 'tall?'

'Not a thing.'

Dat's curus—wery currus,' muttered the man as he walked out.'

I followed after, and when I asked him if he expected an important letter that day he replied.

'Sartin I does. Dat's why I've walked fo' miles dis mawnin'.'

'Where was the letter comming from?'

'I dunno.'

'Who did you expect to write to you?'

'I dunno.'

'Did you expect news or money in the letter?'

'Deed I didd, sah. I 'spected that letter might hab $20 in it.'

'Who from?'

'I dunno.'

He then told me he could neither read nor write, had no friends to write to him, had never mailed a letter nor received one in his life, and yet he had inquired for mail at least 500 times a year for the past ten years. In fact. it wasn't an hour after I left him before he circled to the office again and said:

'I reckon I mus' hab some mail dis time?'

'No—nothing for you.'

'Well, if dat hain't curus—... Reckon I'd better wait fur dat ... o'cloc train.

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Intelligence has just been received at Latona, from Fort Qu'Appelle North West territory, of a very sad accident by which Miss Isabella Smith, daughter of the late James Smith, from Glenelg township near Latona and her neice Maggie Ross Mcintosh, a little girl of eight years, daughter of Mr. Hugh McIntosh, formerly of Suillivan township, lost their lives.

Isabella Smith and her neice had gone on a visit to her brothers place, about seventeen miles from the Fort and on the evening of Friday 21st of July, left for home, accompanied by this young man. There being numerous trails on the prarie leading to different places. It being dark it appears they had taken a different road from the one leading to the Fort. Apparently they had wandered about most of the night and when within half a mile from the Fort, in trying to cross the river, had missed the landing place on the opposite shore, and instead, came to a steep bank up which it was impossible to ascend.

It is supposed that the horse, in trying to climb up the bank, had fallen back and the water being deep at that point, all three being unable to extricate themselves, were drowned. Their bodies were found and taken out of the water next morning by the Mounted Police.

THURSDAY, AUG. 17.

OUR ANNIVERSARY.

Two Years Old.

We are about to enter upon our third year of existence, and one's birthday is certainly an opportune time to take a retrospective and prospective view of one's work, and its results.

We have to thank our patrons for the measure of success we have met with in the past; our subscription list has been largely increased, and our advertising and printing patronage continues to grow satisfactorily. This success is doubtless accounted for by the fact that we have studied to give our readers a good local paper, free from the heat of politics, and untrammelled by sectarianism of any kind.

Looking forward, we have to consider in what way we can further benefit our subscribers, and increase their numbers.

With the first number in our next volume, we contemplate making a very great alteration and improvement in

THE STANDARD.

Instead of 4 pages, as at present, we intend increasing that number to 8; the pages will be smaller than they are now; instead of 32 columns, we intend increasing this to 40 columns: and a great portion of the paper will be printed in smaller type. By this means, we shall, henceforth be able to devote a larger space to news. We cannot lose sight of the fact that our subscribers desire to have a weekly view of the world's doings. The limited space at our disposal has compelled us to make this view a very contracted one. All this will now be changed.

At the same time, no pains will be spared to continue to give full local information. Our correspondents are being increased in number, and at the same time, increased in value.

This alteration causes us to enlist a few more subscribers. In our endeavour to improve we hope to receive even greater support, and the earnest co-operation of our subscribers.

THE STANDARD.

Our Holiday.

TO OUR READERS.

It is now a time-honored custom for the country paper to take a Christmas holiday at Midsummer. All around us the papers suspend operations for a week at this season of the year, and next week we intend to observe the custom, and print no paper. Our subscribers will be busy harvesting,—may the weather favour them,—and they can better spare the paper than at Yule-tide.

KIMBERLEY.

From our own Correspondent.

Hay was very heavy, and is saved in good order.

Fall wheat all cut. Yield will be 35 to 45 bushels per acre. This is above average.

Spring crops good on the whole.

Roots suffered from drought, but the late showers are bringing them round.

To much rain just now for the ripe grain.

Mr Howell is fitting up a store for Mr Bell.

Steps are being taken to have the post office removed into a more central place in the village.

Mr Plewes is overhauling his grist mill, and putting in another run of stones.

Mr Geo. Graham sold 40,000 shingles to Mr. W. J. McFarland, Markdale, for his new elevator on Monday last.

A great number of men are working on the Melancthon drainage; the works are progressing rapidly, under the management of the different captains.

The Dundalk Drainage has a poor show. We hope that the captains will put at least one drain through the village this season. The Ratepayers and others ought to see to this business.

Samuel McCullough has returned home from a trip to the North West, he is not favourably impressed with the country, preferring Dundalk with all its defects.

$5,000 to lend immediately, on land security, at the office of A. G. Hunter, Loan Agent, Dundalk.

A thrilling story will shortly be commenced in this paper. Now is the time to subscribe, $1 per annum.

R. H. Emerson, a Montreal Journalist, while walking along Jurors street perceived a savage dog rushing down the street, a group of children were in the way and although the gentleman could have easily avoided the animal, he determined to save the children. Accordingly he gave the brute a severe kick as it passed, which unfortunately did not disable it. The next instant the fangs of the animal were fastened in his leg. He shook the dog off and picking up a stone, killed it on the spot. He next proceeded to a druggist and had his wounds cauterized.

Forty cents will pay for the STANDARD till the end of the year.

On Saturday night burglars broke into E. H Gulledge's saddler shop and boot and shoe store Oakville, breaking open the front door. They then attacked the cash drawer bursting it open and robbing it of its contents, about $8 only. They afterwards operated on the safe, first attempting to pry open the combination. Having failed in that they attempted to drill into it, and had succeeded in drilling a hole about half an inch deep when they were disturbed.

A man named George Hunt, employed by J. O. Wisner, Son, & Co., as night watchman, was on Friday morning sentenced to thirty days in gaol for stealing postage stamps, screws, bolts, etc., from the premises while on duty.

A few days ago a little son of Charles Bagness, of Halafax, while attending a Temperence Society picnic, at McArab's Island, was asked by an unknown man if he would take a piece of cake, at the same time producing some. The boy took several bites, and soon became sick, vomiting violently. Since then he has been confined to his bed, and to-day is reported to be in a bad state, suffering terrible pains in the body, and his face being very much swollen. Yesterday several of his teeth came out. Another boy who was with Bagness say the man was a stranger, and that he took one of the early boats to return to town. Bagness suffering is apparently caused by mercurial poisoning.

A young Toronto couple were engaged to be united in wedlock on a certain evening. The license was bought, the ring procured, friends invited, and all preparations made. But alas for the fickleness and uncertainty of the course of true love, something occurred of which she did not approve, and straightway refused to take her part in the ceremony, and rejected the proferred hand of her lover for ever. Nor did it end then but taking back to her heart a former lover, the two agreed to be man and wife, and the next evening were quietly and happily locked in Hymen's holy bonds. The couple departed by the evening train to spend their honeymoon leaving the rejected lover to mourn in anguish his bitter lot.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN

BY

BERTH.

CHAPTER XXIX.

It was a brilliant day in the month of April.

The sweet to be forgotten August, the autumn, the winter, and the early spring had passed away, still Scarswood Hall, Essex remained the same.

Lady Cecil sat in the park, Pansy and Pearl were playing near, Lady Cecil sketched a little, and thought a great deal.

She thought of Sir Arthur, who 8 months ago had asked her to be his wife.

Once had they met since, but what a change!

She well knew that his heart was Katherin's, that he loved the stately governess.

Sir Arthur—ere he left England—visited Katherine, he knew not why. He knew he loved her, that ever would love her.

But he was proud—proud of his nobility, proud of his old lineage, of his spotless name.

She might be Earl Ruysland's daughter, but she had been an adventuress. She might be of noble blood, but she had plotted and worked for revenge. She had been an actress. She had been at the altar with a worthless wretch.

Should he be first to blot his family escutcheon?

No! She should never be a Treganna!

Thus determined, he left England. But he could not forget her.

Three months later he wrote to her from Constantinople: he confessed all his scruples, all his love.

Would she be his wife?

Her answer was a refusal, she was unworthy of him, her life had gone wrong from first to last.

He wrote her again and again, but she was very firm.

She had atoned in a great measure for the past. She had written Sir Peter, returned his money, and as all the blame of Lady Dangerfield's conduct at the ball was hers, she asked that Sir Peter and Lady Dangerfield might be united.

Ruysland had gone abroad, where living was cheap.

Lady Cecil remained and acted as governess to Pansy and Pearl at Scarswood.

Sir Arthur returned and again pleaded with Katherine, and for a long time she held out. She said, 'She who was once Helen Herncastle can never be Lady Treganna,' and thus she nobly refused him having won his affection.

At last, however, she consented: & three weeks later she was his bride—his wife.

Thus Ruysland had Treganna for his son-in-law after all.

O'Donnell returns from New Orleans after his rich grandfather death, finds Lady Cecil sketching his head—the face she loved—under the King's Oak.

After considerable parleying, she at length consented to be his wife.

Pansy and Pearl stood petrified to see the embraced pair. O'Donnell was happy.

Take one last look before the scene vanishes.

Sir Peter and Lady Dangerfield are dragging out a married existence at Scarswood.

Lanty Lafferty and his 'Shusan' are the happy possessors of the Silver Rose.

Henry Otis is a prosperous London practitioner.

Squire Talbot is about to unite himself to Rose O'Donnell.

Captain and Lady Cecil O'Donnell are happy beyond all that I could express.

Lastly, Sir Arthur and Lady Treganna, still travelling on the continent happy in each other's affection. They will soon return to their Cornish mansion, where for 400 years worthy mistresses have ruled, none of whom were more beloved, or honored than she who but recently played the role of Helen Herncastle.

Her face floats before me as I write the words, noble, tender, peaceful, and happy—at last.

Let the name that began the story end it—

KATHERINE.

THE END.

MR WM. LUCAS ON THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

Mr W. Lucas returned from a trip to the prairie province last week. He visited Winnipeg, Brandon, and other minor places; and in the course of his travels he has met with a few who have made their mark, and are satisfied with the country; and our banker has also met with many who are utterly disgusted with the country, who vow they would rather live on one meal a day in Ontario than suffer the hardships of Manitoba.

In Mr Lucas's opinion some of the most serious drawbacks are:—the shortness of the season for agricultural work: the scarcity and high price of building material and fuel; and the extreme heat in summer and cold in winter.

The mosquitoes are extremely troublesome during the summer, rendering it almost an impossibility for either man or beast to work at times.

Mr Lucas was somewhat surprised to find so much poor land,—the general opinion here being that the soil is almost universally good. He is of opinion that well nigh two-thirds of the land is unfit for cultivation, for the present, being marshy, sandy or stony.

Some men, who were well-to-do farmers in Ontario a year ago, say that they have endured more suffering and hardship during their brief existence in the prairie province than in all their lives besides. In order to succeed, a man must make up his mind to endure hardships and privations, otherwise the north-west pioneer will be disappointed.

Good cows are scarce enough at the best, and it is a pity to see choice milkers given over to milk men, with a certainty that not only will their progeny never help perpetuate the race of choice cows, but that they also will after a few years at most, be lost to the dairy interest of the country. When a farmer gets one of the best cows he should hold on, or if for any reason he finds it advisable to sell, let him sell to some brother farmer who will keep the cow as a breeder, and not sacrifice her to this modern Moloch of the bovine race.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

Three indictments have been ordered against Norman McLeod, son of the eminent Scottish divine, who was arrested at New York on Friday night for obtaining goods on false representations.

A brakeman named David Holmes was killed by an accident on the Canada Pacific Railway on Saturday at Sidney station. The body was severed in two, the train having passed over him.

On Tuesday morning last a man hired from the livery of Mr. Robt. Foster, St. Catherines, a horse and buggy to go for a drive. He has not yet returned, and search having been made it was ascertained that he crossed the frontier at Fort Erie. He has been traced to Buffalo. The matter is in the hands of a Buffalo police. The buggy was a new one and the horse valuable, the outfit being valued at $350.

Mr. H. Perry, who had his horse and buggy taken off by a man named Watson, has secured his rig. He got word from the constable of Orangeville, that a horse answering the published description was in that towm. Down there Mr. Perry went and after a little parleying with one of the hotel keepers, who had received it in trade for another rig and $10, got his outfit. Watson left the horse and the buggy he had received in keeping with the hotel-keeper with whom he had exchanged and with the $10 boot dug out.

LAID ON THE SHELF.

Mr. Thomas Claydon, Shelburne, Ont., writes: "I have been suffering with a lame back for the past thirty years, and tried everything I heard of without success. Not long ago I was persuaded to use St. Jacob's Oil. I purchased a bottle, and, strange to say, before I had used it all, I was perfectly cured. I can confidently recommend it to any one afflicted. No one can speak too highly of its merits." Mr. W. E. Weeckley, also of Shelburne, thus mentions a matter of his experience : "I have been a sufferer with rheumatism for years. I was laid up with a severe attack a short time ago, and I can truly say that St. Jacobs Oil produced the quickest relief that I ever experienced. I cheerfully recommend it to every sufferer."

Markdale, Aug. 14, 1882.

To the Editor.

SIR.—I think Markdale is becoming celebrated for fires, Yesterday, Sunday, about half-past six in the evening, I was in my garden, and on looking down towards McFarland's mill property, I observed smoke rising from the house at the end of the mill. I thought all was not right and sent two persons down as fast as possible and when they arrived, there was a fire started at the end of the dwelling house. They were in time to water it out. Ten minutes more and the whole premises would have been in a blaze.

W. P. Ritchie.

OSPREY.

Haying all over. Good crop.

Fall wheat above the average.

Spring wheat looks well.

Oats and barley will be short in the straw, but will yield a fair average in grain.

Two many showers for the ripened grain of late.

Several cases of horse and cattle poisoning and stabbing have occurred during the past two months in this section.

PRESENTATION

TO THE REV. J. WARD.

A few of the more enthusiastic of the children of the Church belonging to St. Mary's, Maxwell, being wishful to shew their appreciation of the Incumbent's interest in the Sunday School and all other church matters, collected among themselves the sum of $22.00, which they placed in the hands of Mr Thomas Ross ; and not being able to decide what to purchase with the same that their pastor would appreciate as a token of their value of his interest in them, desired Mr Ross to offer the money to the Incumbent the first opportunity with an expression of their desire of his acceptance of the same, to purchase whatever he might think best, as a token of their affectionate regard.

The Incumbent received the money contributed at the hands of Mr Ross, but has not yet had an opportunity to put it to the object desired by the contributors. He will probably have an opportunity of doing so shortly, and in the meantime would say that he not only values very much the gift, but much more the spirit in which it was contributed and offered, because evidence that his labour among them has not been in vain.

PRICEVILLE.

From our own Correspondent.

Hay is a fair crop ; saved in good condition.

Fall wheat very fine.

Spring crops will be short in the straw, especially oats.

Too much rain.

The bricklayers are now on the third story of the new flouring mill.

'Volcanic eruption at Priceville,' in next issue.

CHATSWORTH.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr John Wright, a clerk in the employ of Mr C. Goode, met with a severe accident on Wednesday last. whilst assisting to roll a barrel of vinegar down cellar. The barrel slipped throwing Mr Wright down and causing his head heavily against the earthen floor, whereby he received a severe cut over the eye. Dr Bennet stitched it up.

There are some anomolies in the Holland Show list this year. Heavy prizes are offered for the best squash and the best rag mat, whilst one and two-year old steers are left out entirely. There is a prize for 3-year old steers, but it is claimed that these should be shown with the working oxen. Indeed it is not an unusual thing for 3 year olds to take first money in the working oxen class. Young steers are a very profitable stock, and it seems only fair that something should be done towards encouraging their improvement.

An unusually heavy hailstorm burst ovet the farm of Mr John Atkinson, lot 8, con. 8, Holland, on Thursday last, almost completely threshing out 50 acres of spring wheat, 6 acres of fall wheat, 14 of barley, 24 of oats, and 18 of peas. The storm covered some 500 or 600 acres, but the greater part of this, with the exception of Mr. Atkinson's farm, was bush. The fall wheat was standing in shocks, and the land beside each shock was literally covered with the threshed grain. Several parcels of the different varieties were shewn here the following day as completely threshed out as if they had passed through a machine. The hail could have been gathered in pailfuls even on the afternoon following. The majority of the stones were over an inch in diameter ; and three children caught in the storm were severely battered about the head and shoulders with the falling hail. Mr Atkinson's loss will be about $700, and much sympathy is expressed for him.

A large number of cattle were at the fair here on Monday last, considering the season, but buyers were few, and not up to what was expected.

Mr Robt McDowell stands at the head of the list of successful candidates at the recent intermediate examination at Owen Sound.

WILLIAMSFORD.

Mr. Robt. Timson has purchased the Galbraith property for $525, and will build an Hotel on the same.

There is a boom in Insurance, so says R. M. Galbraith, who is also taking orders for the Font Hill Nurseries.

Most of the fall wheat and barley is saved in good condition around here.

Geo. Pereiro has his house fitted up, and will now push the cabinent business. He is a good mechanic and will no doubt do well.

PERSONALS.

Mr Wm. Lucas has returned from the N.W.

Dr Armstrong has been having a good time generally in Parry Sound district.

Mr and Mrs Richard Douglas from Niagara are visiting their friends near Markdale.

Mr C. D. Cobden, of the firm of Cobden Manufacturing Co, Toronto, and his wife have spending a few days with Mr Bowes. Mr Cobden and Mrs Bowes are brother and sister.

Mrs John Miller, of Owen Sound, is on a visit to her uncle, Mr J. Miller. She has been exceedingly ill ; glad to see her recovering.

Finlay MacRae, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, gave us a call last week. We are glad to see him about again after his severe accident. His leg is still tender, and requires careful treatment. He uses a stout cane to assist him in getting around.

VITAL STATISTICS.

There has been registered with Mr. W. J. Bellamy, Div. Registrar of Artemesia; for the half-year ending 30th June, 1882, the following :—Births, 55 ; Marriages, 17; Deaths, 29. There is a law necessitating the registration of births, marriages and deaths. there is also a penalty of $20 and costs, if registrations are not made within 30 days.

One man with a trade is worth a thousand without one. A return to the old plan of apprenticing boys to trades is being advocated. The host of young men in every large city who apply for employment, and fail to get, for the reason that they cannot truthfully affirm that they are educated or especially fitted for any particular business, constitute a potent argument in favour of reform. Under the apprenticeship system we would have fewer ignorant mechanics and incompetent business men. A trade is half a man's fortune.

A negro preacher described hell as being ice-cold, where wicked froze to all eternity. When asked why, he said, 'Cause I don't care to tell dem people nuffin else. Why if I tell dem dat hell is warm, dey want to go right away, some of dem rheumatic ole niggers, de very fus frost.'

A minister was once catechising the girls' bible class before the congregation, when he put the first question to a stout girl whose father kept a liquor store, "What is your name ?" No reply. He repeated the question, when she replied, "None of your fun, Mr Minister, ye ken my name weel eneuch. D'ye no say when ye come to our house on a night, Bet, bring me some whisky ?"

At Peterboro on Tuesday night W. A. Gregston, a young man aged about 30 years, attempted to commit suicide by taking a large quantity of paris green. Dr. King was summoned and administered antidotes, and this morning the man is alive but very low. Gregston came to Peterboro' with the Howard Clifton Church Choir Company, but was discharged on account of his drinking habits. He has been working in town as a painter at good wages, but having wasted them in drink he was unable to go to secure another engagement with Clifton. On hearing of his discharge from his employ here, and being without money, he attempted to solve the great problem with Paris green.

The result of the first trial for an agrarian murder under the Repression of Crime act augurs well for the cause of law and order. The initial case, upon which a special jury has sat under that Act, has been signalized by the first conviction for an agrarian murder recorded in Ireland since the present agitation threatening proportions. Another feature of interest in Irish affairs is the substantial reduction in rent made upon the first application made by a tenant to the Land Court to fix a "fair rent." Dublin is now very strongly garrisoned to prevent an outbreak on the unveiling of O'Connell's monument.

A Port Hope butcher went into the country to buy some lambs. He called on a farmer who said he had lambs for sale, but they were running on the road. They both started to hunt up the flock. Finally they discovered a flock under a meeting house shed and both went in and picked out three of the best lambs in the flock, the butcher paying the man for the same. But now the fun comes in, The lambs did not belong to the man who sold them. There is likely to be some fun over it before the matter is settled. Farmers, watch your own flocks, and whatever you do don't get into the wrong flock, even if it should be a mistake, and if not a mistake, so much the worse.

Speaking to his constituents at Northampton the other day, Bradlaugh said it was within his power to go to the table of the house any day he choose and take his seat, and he should do so whenever he thought it would serve him in the fight in which he was engaged. One of the best answers an infidel ever received was made by an old lady to whom he remarked that he didn't believe in a God he couldn't see. "Do you believe you have any brains ?" she asked. EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say :

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

IT HAS STOOD THE TEST OF TIME.

For 25 years has Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry been before the people, and its popularity is today greater than ever, because it has proved reliable in the treatment of all forms of Bowel Complaint incident to the Summer season.

[illegible] Willy was undergoing the disagreeable operation of having his hair combed by his mother, and he grumbled at the manoeuvre. "Why Willey," said his mother, "you ought not to make such a fuss. I don't fuss and cry when my hair is being combed." "Yes" replied the youth, "but your hair ain't hitched to your head."

Too many people plant only a first light crop of lettuce. It may be sown in August and is still one of the most useful of vegetables. The winter varieties may be sown as late as September.

The nearer we follow nature in the treatment of disease, the more successful we are. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is Nature's Specific for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Cholic, and all forms of Summer Complaints. It speedily cures Canker of the stomach or bowels, and is safe for infants as well as adults.

They were standing near the gate, very close together, and perfectly oblivious to all around them. This is what our reporter heard as he was passing: "Oh, George does your moustache feel as nice to you as it does to me?"

The best evidence of the superior merit and virtues of Dr Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for the cure of Summer Complaints is that its popularity and demand is greatest where it has been longest known.

Mr. W. H. Campaigne, of the little mills, lost a purse containing $60 in money and some notes, recently, while on his way to Flesherton. Mr. Granger found the purse and promptly returned it to the owner, who rewarded the finder handsomely.—Advance.

The safest, best and cheapest medicine in the world is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters. Sold in large bottles at 50 cents by all druggists, Turner, Markdale. Parsons, Dundalk.

The Poultry Yard recommends coffee grounds for fowls,

The prescription of a skillfully physician, and composed of vegetable drugs of great remedial power, Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters purify the blood, give tone and vigor to the system, cures Dyspepsia and indigestion when all other medicines fail. Have you tried it? Sold by Druggists 50c a bottle. Turner, Markdale. Parsons, Dundalk,

An average 2-year old steer will eat its own weight of different material in two weeks.

Scrofula is a depraved condition of the system often hereditary, and characterized by indolent tumors, glandular affections, bad blood and a low condition of vitality that tends towards consumption, which is really Scrofula of the Lungs. Burdock Blood Bitters cure Scrofulous diseases from a pimple to an abscess, by purifying the blood, correting the secretions and giving a healthy tone to each organ.

The average quantity of milk required by the creameries, to make a pound of butter, is about 22 lbs. or 10 to 12 quarts.

A hen is a most inconsiderate and unaccountable creature. Now that she can lay eggs worth 3 cents each, she takes a vacation and refuses to have anything to do with the business By-and-bye when chicken-seed are down to 10 cents a dozen, she'll put on extra help, and even work at night to flood the market.

The indications of the approaching season seem to threaten an unusual amount of the various forms of bowel complaints. Our readers would do well to supply themselves with some reliable remedy like Dr Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, as a safeguard against sudden attacks of Cholera, Morbus, Colic. Dysentery, &c., that unless promptly treated are often suddenly fatal.

While Chris. Johnson and several other laborers were engaged in unloading the schooner Todman, at Owen Sound on Monday, a chunk of coal about the size of a wheelbarrow struck Chris. on the head. It broke the coal all up, but after indulging in a few quotations not found in the revised edition Chris. resumed his work as if nothing had happened.

N C. Polson & Co., druggi[illegible], Kingston, express themselves [illegible]prised at the sale of Burdoc[illegible] Bitters in that locality, where[illegible] medicines are hard to introdu[illegible], say they," the gross last [illegible] a few days since, will convince [illegible] that the demand is good, and [illegible] it is giving satisfaction to our customers."

Try Kendall's Spavin Cure, a sure remedy for spavins, curbs, ringbones, or any enlargement of the joints. See advertisement.

Mr. Wm. Ranson, of South Norwick, says: For sixteen years I suffered from Billiousness, never had any medicine do me any permanent good until recommended by our druggists. (J. Wesley Fish & Co., Otterville,) to try Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, which have done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken. I would, with the utmost confidence, recommend them to all suffering from Billiousness, &c. Sold by all druggists. Turner, Markdale: Parsons, Dundalk.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Read Proof Below.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Hamilton, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. Kendall & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

Youngstown, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

Dr B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Wingham, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone if properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure ON HUMAN FLESH.

West Enosburgh, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

St. John, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for [illegible] stifle.

Yours truly,
Wm. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

The best evidence of the superior merit and virtues of Dr Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for the cure of Summer Complaints is that its popularity and demand is greatest where it has been longest known.

The nearer we follow nature in the treatment of disease, the more successful we are. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is Nature's Specific for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Cholic, and all forms of Summer Complaints. THURSDAY, AUG. 24

"WATTER-CLOSET" SCARE.

Happily, it is seldom a police court has to meet in Markdale, still less frequent does such bungling work engage the attention of the court as was the case on Wednesday last. This inspection, the mode, the report, the laying of information, has all been done in such an ignorant, and offensive manner that the inspector has brought upon himself considerable odium, and also mulcted either himself or the village in unncessary expense.

That the Health Acts should be put in force in Markdale, no one can deny, the filthy state of many of the outhouses in the village as proven before the bench on Wednesday is evidence that the inspector has set about his work none too soon. Many of the necessary houses were sworn to be in such condition that the inspector's witness could not get within several feet of the building. To say the least of it, the existence of these places is a disgrace to the owner or occupier.

In these instances, the scathing exposure of the inspector made publicly cannot fail to have a beneficial effect.

No one attempts to deny the absolute necessity of having the outhouses kept clean, and those who escape the penalties, do so, in most cases, not because they have complied with the act, but on account of flaws in the indictment. The cases dismissed were chiefly those in which the sworn evidence of the inspector directly contradicted the sworn information given by the inspector.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat is an old maxim of universal application, (Ignorance of the law excuses no man) and it behoves every ratepayer to become acquainted with the law, and not wait for the inspector to come around to enlighten him. On the other hand the same rule applies to the inspector who should first learn his duty and then do it; then he will meet with the support and encouragement of the people.

All honor is due the man who incurs odium in the faithful discharge of onerous duty.

Extract from Act bearing on these Nuisance cases.

"The members of the municipal council, Township, Cities, Towns and incorporated villages the trustees of every police village shall be Health Officers within their respective municipalities under the next 5 sections this act; but any such council may by bylaw delegate the power of its members as such Health Officers to a committee of their own number, or to such persons, either including or not including one or more of themselves, as the council thinks best.

The Health Officers of any Municipalities or police village, or any two of them, may in the day time, as often as they think necessary, enter into and upon any premises in the place for which they hold office and examine such premises.

If upon such examination they find that the premises are in a filthy or unclean state, or that any matter or think is there which is their opinion, may endangerthe public health, they or any two of them, may order the proprietor occupant of the premises to cleanse the same and to remove what is so found there.

Such Health Officers, in case the proprietor or occupier of the premises neglects or refuses to obey the directions may call to their assistance all constables and any other persons they think fit, and may enter on the premises and cleanse the same and remove therefrom and destroy what in their opinion it is necessary to remove or destroy for the preservation of the public health.

PICNIC AT EUGENIA.

Returning for the nonce to a somewhat primitive state of existence seems to be a favourite pastime with people nowadays.

"Among the woods and waters we'll ramble," is an almost universal cry when the summer and autumn months come around. Toil becomes pleasure; laborious climbing becomes pleasant recreation; and household drudgery is known by another name when undertaken at a picnic.

The Masonic Lodge of Markdale & Flesherton sighed for "too, too, utterly utter," and arranged for a day beside the meandering stream and the turbulent waters of Eugenia.

Here arrived, the vehicles discharged their living freight and sundry baskets, which we will imagine contain the iron instruments for initiating members into the ancient secret druidical society. As we contemplated this mysterious ceremony, lo, a seer, doubtless some P.M.Q.M.R.M of the order, kindles a fire, the smoke whereof rises to the heavens. We involuntarily exclaim, "Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb and the green peas?" Then from the secret recesses of the mysterious baskets are brought forth good things innumerable, both small and great.

The ceremony of clearing a table as adopted by the masons is to say the least of it, a very ancient one, and on this occasion, after invoking the blessing of their deity short work was made of a rite that some wished could last for aye (these same masons are, as a rule, disciples of Epicurius). The afternoon was spent as seemed best to the company, many of whom adorned themselves with ferns and flowers emblematic of many various virtues supposed to be possessed by the order; and in gathering the wild berries of the grove after the manner of the ancients. Some ventured beneath the cascade, and nymph-like, but clothed with the newest and most recently patented waterproofs, laved in the spray of the silver waters. Others like mermaids, sat upon the rocks in the midst of the turbulent stream.

Thus passed the day till the smoke ascending from the historic camp fire betokened that the high priests of the order were about to offer the evening sacrifice. The people drew near, and with one voice rent the air with their invocation. Berries from the wild fastnesses of the woods gathered by Mason McFarland and wife, and by them decorated with the leaves of a cryptogamic plant, commonly known as a polypodus, adorned the grassy table. This Adamic ceremony, generally called by the order an inner refresher having been successfully performed, and a blessing in a tuneful strain hymned for the maternel parent of the head of the order, the assemblage dispersed.

Thirteen chariots conveyed them to their habitations.

The whole of the arrangements were satisfactorily carried out, and

When next the masons air themselves,
May we be there to see.

THE EGYPTIAN WAR

The Porte has once more changed front. It has removed the embargo upon the exportation of mules for British service from Syria, in deference to Lord Dufferin's strong protest. It is announced that he has also agreed to England's terms for a Military Covention, which will be formally signed to-day. The rebels have cut the Fresh Water Canal between Ismailia and Suez, but there is no fear of any serious results. Arabi appears to be still relating from Suez Canal, the banks along the whole length now being in the hands of the British. He is again massing his forces at Kafr-el Dwar, where his entrenchments are being strengthened, and at Tel-el-Kebir, where his main body is, and where the great battle of campaign will be fought. The absurdity of previous rumours concerning Arabi's intentions are now apparent. The reported rise in the Nile has probably hastened the movements of Sir Garnet's division, which has already advanced from Ismailia, and a track is being laid as rapidly as possible to facilate the movement of the troops, nearly all of whom are now landed.

On Tuesday last at the Revere House, before Justices Brown, Elliott and Rae, an exciting trial came on arising out of a charge laid by a farmer. Thos. MARKDALE CIRCUS.

GREAT ONE-MAN COMBINATION TROUPE.

FARCICAL EXHIBITION.

First, Last, and ONLY Performance.

POSITIVELY ONE DAY ONLY.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

At the Revere House, on Wednesday last, before A. Elliott, Esq., J.P.. and Jas. Struthers, Esq., J.P., a batch of titled and untitled offenders against the health acts were brought to the bar of justice by police inspector Reid. The summonses in most cases were of the same wording, and charged the defendants with having on the 19th inst., upon their premises, a filthy "watter-closet," thereby endangering the health of the inhabitants; in some instances this wording was varied with "sloppy yard, filth and obstructions on street," &c.

M.P.'s, J.P.'s, Revs., and constables were all placed in the same box, and a big day's work was provided for the bench by the inspector.

The first case called was W. Brown, Esq., J.P., who pleaded guilty, but denied knowledge of the existence of the nuisance, as the house has been unoccupied some months. Judgment deferred.

Geo. Noble, constable; pleaded guilty. Judgment deferred.

Thos. Mullarky, police trustee, pleaded guilty; judgment deferred.

H. D. Irwin, Esq., J.P., Mr Ben. Coleman, and Mr J. Lyons, school trustees, pleaded non liability on account of not being notified by the teacher or the inspector. Judgment deferred,

Mark Armstrong pleaded not guilty. Judgment deferred.

R. Askin, case withdrawn, informality in summons.

Wilson Benson, pleaded not guilty, and that he received no notification from the inspector. Judgment deferred.

Rev. S. J. Corcoran, pleaded not guilty, and wished to have the act read under which he was summoned; and by what authority. He said that he used disinfectants. The plaintiff's council made insulting and personal remarks in this and other cases, and rightly secured for himself the censure of the bench, and several smart raps from the defendant. Judgment deferred.

Wm. Douglas, sloppy yard, pleaded not guilty, and want of notice. Judgment deferred.

A. Dunlop, guilty; judgment deferred.

Thos. Foster, represented by wife, wished to adjourn the case. The place was perfectly clean, cleaner than the inspector's, and 'twas a pity he (Reid) had nothing better to do than loose her chickens out. Thought he ought to know difference between hen-house and closet

John Hill and Mrs. E. Rutledge were charged conjointly. Mr McFarland represented Mrs Rutledge. Plea not guilty. Called witnesses to prove place was clean. Judgment deferred.

A. Jones, guilty, judgment deferred.

Thos. Henry, pleaded not guilty. He elicited from the inspector that he did where the place was; in fact knew nothing about it. Had marked it "½" but could not say whether it detrimental to health, because he knew nothing about it. Dismissed, plaintiff to pay all costs.

Haskett Bros. Not guilty, dismissed, plaintiff to pay costs.

Thos Eiseline, pleaded guilty. Judgment deferred.

Alex. Kay, pleaded not guilty, proved that the place was regularly cleaned, dismissed, plaintif to pay costs.

Wm. Kay pleaded not guilty, but admitted having been notified, adjourned.

John Lyons, pleaded not guilty no receipt of notice, dismissed, plaintiff to pay costs.

Edward Large, pleaded not guilty, non receipt of notice, case adjourned.

W. J. McFarland, ... street opposite store, case adjourned on account of informality in summons.

J. McKenna, withdrawn, plaintiff to pay costs.

Wm. Mason pleaded not guilty, this was a "quarter" bad, the inspector sworn, that it was not detrimental to public health, although he had on his oath before the majistrate in laying information sworn that it endangered the public health, case dismissed plaintiff to pay costs.

Susan Noble, withdrawn.

James Noble, withdrawn.

R. S. Rae, street obstruction, case withdrawn.

Dr. T. S. Sproule, M. P. case postponed.

Fred Sargeant, pleaded not guilty, no closet on his premises at all, no notice, case dismissed.

After hearing all the evidence the plaintiff's council (Reid) endeavoured to show what the inspector had done perfectly right, that the notice in the Markdale STANDARD was correct. and a sufficient notice.

Mr. J. Lyons, with the consent of the court defended himself holding that the notice was not a legal and sufficient one. He also submitted to their worships that it was perfectly within their power and jurisdiction to deal with the cases, and that it was not necessary to submit the evidence to the county attorney.

Mr W. J. McFarland said that in so far as the inspector did his duties he had his support and that of most of the inhabitants of the village. He also maintained that the spring of the year was the proper time to cleanse the premises. He said that there had been great partiality shown, and that the inspector had acted spitefully towards him and others.

Mr Ths. Henry said that he thought not one of the defendants had a word to say against Mr Reid so long as he kept within his line of duty; what he objected to was the modus operandi of the whole proceeding. The law defined the duty of the inspector very clearly. He also maintained that in a legal document like a summons such words should be used which could not be mistaken. Such a thing as a water-closet. in the proper sense of the term, did not exist in Markdale and it was folly to attempt to convict a man here on that charge. In law, such a term as half-clean, quarter-unclean were unknown.

Mr Coleman maintained that the school trustees were not liable until they had been notified. He also coroborated Mr McFarland as to the language used by the inspector.

The prosecutor's council went over the cases, but failed to adduce any authority justifying the proceedings.

The bench requested the audience to withdraw for a few minutes while they deliberated. After about half an hour, they were re-admitted. and the judgments given as above. Plaintiff to pay costs in all cases withdrawn or dismissed The evidence in the rest of the cases has now been submitted to the county attorney, and the result will be known at the adjourned Court on Wednesday next.

It was about 11.30 p.m. when the Court arose.

IT ALWAYS WORKS JUST THIS RESULT.

Mr. John Bonner, proprietor of the celebrated Young street Dry Goods and Gents Furnishing Store, Toronto, tells a most remarkable story of the Great German Remedy. "St Jacobs Oil cured me of a bad case of neuralgia, of five years standing, when I had given up hopes of being cured, and had tried fifty different so-called remedies. I now keep it all the time not only at home, but here in my place of business; it is an excellent thing and something nobody should be without."

Mr. James C. Stephens has been appointed Collector of Her Majesty's Customs at the port of Owen Sound, vice W. A. Stephens. Esq., superannuated, who has been collector for over thirty years.

Owen Sound fall races will take place on the 19th and 20th September.

N C. Polson & Co., druggists, &c., Kingston, express themselves as surprised at the sale of Burdock Blood Bitters in this locality, where patent medicines are hard to introduce, but, say they," the gross last ordered a few days since, will convince you that the demand is good, and that it is giving satisfaction to our customers."

It is pleasing to notice that some of the graves in the churchyard have been decorated with flowering plants, and otherwise neatly kept. Just what ought to be done.

Scrofula is a depraved condition of the system often hereditary, and characterized by indolent tumors, glandular affections, bad blood and a low condition of vitality that tends towards consumption, which is really Scrofula of the Lungs. Burdock Blood Bitters cure Scrofulous diseases from a pimple to an abscess, by purifying the blood, correcting the secretions and giving a healthy tone to each organ.

STOLEN BILLS IN CIRCULATION.—The Syracuse Journal warns its readers to look out for ten dollar bills on the Consolidated Bank of Canada. It is believed that a large number of them have been circulated during the last week, and it should be borne in mind that all ten dollar bills on this Bank are worthless, as they were stolen unsigned and the signatures forged.

The indications of the approaching season seem to threaten an unusual amount of the various forms of bowel complaints, Our readers would do well to supply themselves with some reliable remedy like Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, as a safeguard against sudden attacks of Cholera, Morbus, Colic. Dysentery, &c., that unless promptly treated are often suddenly fatal.

SOMETHING MORE ABOUT THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PRAYER BOOK.

It is a very great error to say, as some do, that the Church of England began in the time of Henry VIII, and that the Prayer Book is only a translation of Roman services. The English Church had long groaned under the bondage of foreign bishops, and many pious men in her communion had often spoken out boldly against the errors Rome had introduced. and grieved over their inability to cast them out.

Many good seeds had been sown by their bold speeches, and when the power of the Pope in England had been overthrown these good seeds sprang up.

Among the foremost of the English reformers was Archbishop Cranmer, and he with other friends of true religion, felt that their work was to cast out unscriptural errors, but not to overthrow one stone of the old church which had been planted in England in the times of the Apostles. Very little was done towards reforming the church in the days of King Henry, for although he had quarrelled with the Pope he was not friendly to true religion. The reformers did all they could to encourage learning, and to spread the knowledge of the Scriptures, but it was not till the reign of Edward VI that much good was done.

It was then ordered that certain bishops should draw up an office for the administration of the Holy Communion in English. They did so, and their labours resulted finally in in setting forth a revised Prayer Book: yet they did not make a new book, but preserved the old forms which had been used ages before, only putting them in the language of the people, (they being written in Latin before). It is easy to see how little there is in the Prayer Book that is new when you know that three-fifths of it are taken from the Holy Scriptures; one fifth consists of prayers and creeds used many centuries before, some of them reaching back to the days of the Apostles, and the remainder consists of prayers and exhortations based upon the above. In later times, during the reign of Elizabeth, James, Charles I and II, the Prayer Book had new enemies. There arose some who are known as Puritans, who became great enemies of the church, and would willingly have destroyed it if they could because they fancied it resembled the Church of Rome, and forgot that it descended from the Apostles. It is hard to tell what would have satisfied them, for when they at length had things all their own way, after killing King Charles, they quarrelled among themselves, and divided up into several religious sects. But they still continued to be enemies of the Church.

We have reason to be thankful that God raised up wise and good men who declared the old to be the better than the new, and who preferred clinging to the ancient landmarks rather than sweeping them away.

The joy of being connected with the Church of the Apostles, of feeling that we have come into possession of pious thoughts and prayers of saints and martyrs, would not have been ours, but instead thereof we would be compelled to feel that a great gulf had yawned between us, and that our history began in modern times.

Whenever then you use your Prayer Book, think of it as one link that binds you with the holy ones of all christian ages, and endeavour to live so as to be no unworthy successor of the saints.

Don't borrow the paper, when you can get it post-free for $1 per annum. New and thrilling story will be commenced shortly. Subscribe now.

The distance from Montreal to Calandar is given as 355 miles, Callandar to Thunder Bay 450, Thunder Bay to Winnipeg 435, Winnipeg to Calgarry 800 and Calgarry to Port Moody 610; 2,850 miles. A comparative table of distances shows that while it is 2,850 miles from Montreal to Port Moody by the C. P. R., it is 3,331 from New York to San Francisco by the shortest possible route, a difference of 481 miles in favor of the Canadian line, and from Liverpool to Yokohama, in Japan, the route by the Canadian Pacific is over 1,010 miles shorter than that by New York and San Francisco.

The distance from Montreal to Callandar is given as 355 miles, Callandar to Thunder Bay 450, Thunder Bay to Winnipeg 435, Winnipeg to Calgarry 800 and Calgarry to Port Moody 610; 2,850 miles. A comparative table of distances shows that while it is 2,850 miles from Montreal to Port Moody by the C. P. R., it is 3,331 from New York to San Francisco by the shortest possible route, a difference of 481 miles in favor of the Canadian line, and from Liverpool to Yokohama, in Japan, the route by the Canadian Pacific is over 1,010 miles shorter than that by New York and San Francisco.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SEASON.

(From the American Agriculturist.

EARLY FATTENING OF ANIMALS

It is quite as important to fatten and market economically, the animal products of the farm, as it is to raise them. A pound of beef, pork, or poultry, can be made much cheaper in September and October, than later in the season, when a larger part of the rations must go to keep up animal heat. There is no sleight of hand in laying fat upon an animal's carcass. It must come out of good honest food in the rations fed. The temperature in the latter part of summer and early autumn, is in favor of the best use of all the fattening articles of food, while there is enough of green food to sharpen the appetite, and keep up good digestion. We have found green corn stalks, especially sweet-corn, an excellent article in the stye, to be fed in connection with corn on the cob, and corn meal, and other rations. We have never seen pork made more rapidly than with this kind of feeding. It will be safe to feed all that the swine will eat up clean, and no more. Slack up the feed a little when anything is left in the trough. This will require a little attention, but the pigs will grow so fast, that one can afford to linger by the stye a few minutes, once in the day to see the fat accumulate. Corn is high this season, and we want to make the best use of it. The best poultrymen we know begin to give extra food in September, when they mean to kill in November. The thanksgiving market is pretty sure to be a good one, and brings ready cash. The small potatoes boiled, and mixed with Indian meal and hot water, make an excellent feed for turkeys and other poultry. This favors growth, as well as fattening. The rations of corn and other grain, unground, may be reserved to the last few weeks of life. Turkeys should have their liberty all through extra feeding. Some poultrymen shut up their geese and ducks, but we doubt the economy of this method. With a good run, they will have a greater variety of food, and thrive better with an access to a pasture with pond or brook, while they are receiving full feed for market. All that the fattening animals will eat up clean, is a good rule for the last month of feeding.

Points on the Hotel Business.

The landlord, my dear children, is an honest man, generally; but unless you keep away from his house, he will take you in if he can.

But do not judge him too harshly. If he can put up with you, you should be able to put up with him.

He is always ready to give everybody a warm reception, and puts you on the register as soon as you arrive.

The landlord is the head of the hotel. He is also its boniface.

The landlord, though usually a temperate man, is never so happy as when he is full.

Nothing pleases him so much as to see a host in his house, but empty though his house may be, still he is a host in himself.

In some hotels they have stated hours for breakfast, dinner and supper; but you can get meals at all ours.

The landlord is ever watchful of his actions, although the keeper of an inn is necessarily inn-discreet.

Drinking habits are not necessarily prevalent at the hotel, but almost everybody's first care on entering one is to call for the porter.

The landlord will give you a room if he have it.

While you are at his house you are his guest, but probably you have already guessed that.

Some persons are very illogical in their treatment of landlords. I once knew a man who said that a certain hotel keeper's house was not fit to lodge in, and immediately afterwards lodged a complaint with him.

The landlord usually charges for extras, but he considers this honest and above board.—Boston Transcript.

Brewers in Parliament.

At the great temperance demonstration, held in Exeter Hall, London, on the 17th of July last, Canon Wilberforce made the following remarks:—

There is not a man in this room who can afford to look down on the Times newspaper. You may not like its mode of dealing with subjects, but the Times newspaper, as one of the wisest men I ever knew told me, has done very much in this matter to raise the standard of journalistic literature. And on the 16th of May the Times had a leading article on the liquor traffic where it simply unveiled the whole face of men against whom we have to fight. The Times said: "You temperance reformers, you are wasting your shot and shell by bombarding these little outposts. You have to carry the whole force of your bombardment against the real fountain head of the evil—the great breweries of this kingdom." Therefore we have striven to raise the workingmen of England to the consciousness of what, with the deepest respect, I would call the intolerable folly of continuing to send back to the House of Commons brewers to represent their interests. (Applause,) I care not what their politics may be. I know many of them to be liberal-hearted good men in their own private lives. I know some of them, and admire them, and like them personally, but I hate their trade, for I believe it is a trade which is at the bottom of the demoralization of this nation; that it is a trade which is at this moment helping to sensualize the upper classes, to vulgarize the middle classes and to brutalize the lower classes. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) When you wear the ribbon of blue you witness what I say before everyone, and I believe that that symbol will have a tremendous weight if we have the misfortune of another election, and a misfortune it might be for some.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Love-Tokens and Trout-Flies—Two Romances—Odds and Ends for the Ladies.

A RUSSIAN ROMANCE.

Among the ladies of honor of the late Empress Marie, of Russia, was one of her country-women, a young Hessian, of whom she was particularly fond. One evening, says a Paris correspondent, when alone with her sovereign, Mlle. X. threw herself at the imperial feet, and, with many tears, avowed that she was loved by the Grand Duke Alexis and returned his passion, wherefore she besought her majesty to consent to the union. The imperial reply was an immediate order to the petitioner to retire to her family at Darmstadt and to the prince to join his squadron in the Baltic. But the august master of Russia had not calculated upon the strength of true love. Mademoiselle got away from her parents, or more probably helped by them to make the journey, took passage on a Cunard steamer, and joined the man of her choice in America, where they were privately married. You remember the visit of the grand duke to the United States in 1872, of course, but neither you nor anyone else had an idea that he was there on a sort of wedding tour. I am assured, though, that the facts are as stated, but fancy that there is a chronological error, and that the episode is of much more recent date. However this may be, the pair were joined in holy wedlock, and the reception of their marriage certificate raised a terrible commotion on the banks of the Neva. Disgraces and vicissitudes of all kinds followed the exploit; Alexis was threatened and cajoled to break off the "disgraceful connection," but he held out bravely, and as the czar's own affair with Princess Dolgorouki came in the nick of time to incline the paternal heart to indulgence, Alexander II. finally agreed to shut his eyes to his son's situation, although sternly refusing to recognize the legitimacy of the marriage. Like the people in the fairy tale, Alexis and his bride were very happy, and now, at the solicitation of the czarina, who appreciates the beauty of a united household, Alexander III. proposes to give the marriage his official sanction. Alexis is one of the most distinguished members of the imperial family. He resembles, in many ways, his uncle, the Grand Duke Constantine, and believing himself much superior, intellectually and physically, to his brothers, for years pinned his faith on the prediction of a gypsy, by whom it was foretold that he would some day be seated on the throne of the Romanoffs. At one time, indeed, circumstances seemed to point to the realization of this prophecy. The first born of the czar died at Nice, the Grand Duke Alexander, the present emperor, seemed incapable of holding the sceptre, and gave no promise of becoming, what he has become, thanks to his wife, a deep thinker and earnest worker, while the Grand Duke Vladimir, an effeminate pleasure-seeker, would have sold his birthright for a casket of jewels, so that Alexis seemed to be the only son in a condition to succeed his father. Since this, events have upset all those calculations, but have not destroyed his aspirations after sovereign grandeur. His dream was Byzantine, the long-cherished secret ambition of his uncle Constantine, but there again he was doomed to disappointment, and so turned toward Asia, where he hopes to found an empire. As anything and everything is possible in this world, who knows whether this dauntless energy may not yet present an imperial crown to her whom, in the teeth of all opposition, he has succeeded in making a princess.

A BURMESE ROMANCE.

In the late king's time his favorite daughter was the Tsalin princess, a girl of great beauty, and a most amiable disposition. All foreign ladies used to go to her, and to her only; for, besides being the highest princess in the land (says the London Globe), her kindness and affability made her the most universally-loved member of the royal family. When the late king died, her late charming mother's rival, Queen Allaynandeau, having practically seized all power and authority, the Tsalin princes was imprisoned, and so cruelly treated by order of the present queen, herself daughter of Allaynandeau, that she fell dangerously sick. Left without any care, and hardly any food, death seemed to be the only deliverer at hand. But Providence watched over the princess. A high official, remotely related to her, and one of the foreign ladies who had been most kindly treated by her formerly, were most active in trying to find for her the means of escape. But the guards were too strict and too many. While her friends were "scheming and considering" one of her own female servants, living in her town, fell sick near her and suddenly died. Another female servant of hers, taking advantage of the isolation in which she and her mistress had been left within their wretched place of confinement, put the corpse into the princess' bed, and the latter, dressed as a common palace slave, and in the hubbub caused by the news of her own death, quickly found her way out and ultimately reached the house of her foreign friend, who being rightly afraid to keep her in her own house had her removed to a safe place outside of Mandalay.

The princess meanwhile being pronounced dead the body was removed and disposed of, but not before the toes on one side had been chopped off, to make it look like the princess, she having had the misfortune to be born with a club foot. After nearly two years the princess, who had entirely recovered her former good health, was taken away from her hiding-place in a large, covered and perfectly close Burmese cart. With the help of her foreign friend, she put on a European dress, and having arrived at the river side, went straight on board of a steamer that was just leaving from Rangoon. But when the steamer reached Koonywa, some two days' journey below Mandalay, the down steamer had just arrived at the same place, and the news soon spread that some petty official or other having lately absconded from Mandalay, orders had been received at the frontier to search closely every up steamer, on hearing which the princess, resuming her Burmese dress, and marking her face up as best she could, landed and crossed the river in a small boat, she having made up her mind to try and reach the Shan country. After the weariest and most perilous journey, on foot all the time, she at last succeeded in reaching the state of a friendly Tsawbwa (chief), under whose hospitable roof she now resides, anxiously looking for Prince Nyoung Yan, who has been repeatedly invited over by a large number of Tsawbwas, anxious to fight under his banner and carry him triumphantly back to the "golden city."

LOVE TOKENS MADE INTO TROUT-FLIES.

"A most extraordinary story of trout-flies made out of human hair was related to me some time ago by a friend of mine, who is a manufacturer of sportsmen's materials," said a jeweller to a Philadelphia Times reporter, while an amused smile played over his features. "There used to be a gay young fellow in this city who made love to every young girl he came across. He must have been rather successful, for he always managed to secure a lock of hair from each of his conquests. This young man had another equally strong passion—trout-fishing. He loved to fish for the speckled beauties of the brook and muse on the many beauteous maidens among whom he divided the treasures of his heart. An idea struck him; he would have a fly constructed out of each lock of hair he possessed. He took his collection of silky love-tokens, gleaned from perfumed tresses, to the manufacturer of sportsmen's materials and requested him to make the desired flies. When finished he placed them in his fishing pocket-book, each one attached to a card with the name of the girl and date of the gift. His subsequent fishing was a long dream of romance. Even in their broiled state the trout had a halo of memory around them which gave them a flavor for which Lucullus would have forfeited an empire. He brought every conceivable color, and kind of hair to be made into flies—black, light and dark brown, gray, white, golden, yellow, auburn and red, curly, wavy, and crinkly. In less than three years my friend made him 150 trout flies, which would be at the rate of a new girl every week. He was asked one day which colored flies he perferred. In reply he said red flies were preferable to any of the others, and that in future he intended to confine his attentions to young ladies whose heads glowed with flame-like hues. In proof of this, he married a girl with red hair, and had ten flies constructed out of one of her tresses. For some little time after his nuptials his heart remained true to his fiery-poiled bride and his red-haired flies. One day, however, he brought my friend a lock of a far deeper hue of auburn, and instructed him to make two flies, as he found the fish would no longer bite at his wife's hair. His better half discovered the change of bait and began to smell a rat. To make matters worse, he one day went to his office, leaving the key to his private desk at home in the lock. The lady examined the premises and discovered the album of flies, to which she had only the previous day added his latest conquest. The wife returned to her mother that very morning, instituted proceedings for a divorce, and gained her suit, the fly-book being produced as evidence in court. If you search the court records you will find full confirmation of what I have just told you."

NEEDLES AND PINS.

In a Philadelphia hotel dining-room the other day a lady cut the corn from the cob before eating it, and a well-dressed but bull-necked fellow whose face was greatly disfigured (he had been in a row the night before) was noticed doing the same thing. Suddenly observing the lady he asked in tones of genuine sympathy and surprise: "Why have you had your front teeth knocked out too?"

"Stuck-up things" is what the New York girls at Spring Lake beach call their Philadelphia sisters. And the Quaker city maidens, ever kind and generous, reciprocate cordially when they inquire: "Have any of those New York creatures a father who has not been accused of financial irregularities?" As a rule, the Philadelphia girl never gets left.

"That," said Bigglin to his wife, when she told him that a new silk dress was necessary for her health and happiness, "is too diaphanous." "Now, Bigglin," she answered, tartly, "I want you to understand that I am not to be put down by musical terms. You can call it a fortissimo or a trombolo, but I'm going to have that dress.'

"But why did you leave her so hastily?" asked a sympathizing friend who was trying to console a lover for his separation from the object of his idolatry. "Oh, it was a sudden impulse." "What sort of an impulse?" "I don't know exactly," returned the sufferer, thoughtfully, "but it must have been at least a No. 12."

Things one would rather have left unsaid: Amiable hostess—"What! must you go already? Really, professor, it's too bad of this sweet young wife of yours to carry you off so early. She always does." Professor—"No, no, not always, Mrs. Bright. At most houses I positively have to drag her away."

"Edward, what do I hear—that you have disobeyed your grandmother, who told you just now not to jump down those steps?" "Grandma didn't tell us not to, papa; she only came to the door and said: 'I wouldn't jump down those steps, boys,' and I shouldn't think she would—an old lady like her."

For a little lady of 2½ years this will do: She had picked up a cane in the corner of the room and was playing with it—a plain stick bent at the end. Papa asked: "What are you doing with the cane?" "It isn't a cane!" "What is it, then?" "It's an umberella without any clothes on it."

One of the regular exercises at normal schools is writing words from dictation and giving their meaning. One of the words given out was "hazardous," which the young lady pupil spelled "hazardess," and defined "a female hazard."

George Bennet bought a dying horse for $5, and drove into Maysville, Va., at a slashing pace. After telling several persons that he paid $200 for the beast, which did not show its condition to casual observers, he managed to get it killed by a locomotive. Then he sued the company for $200. The scheme failed, and its projector is in jail.

ROUGET DE LISLE.

Some Facts About the Author of the Hymn of the "Marseillaise."

M. de Freycinet unveiled the statue of Rouget de l'Isle recently at Choisy-le-Roi. While the guests were waiting for this some of the visitors went to the house where Rouget de l'Isle passed the last few years of his life. People are still alive who remember him, weary and taciturn, crawling painfully along as he tried to aid digestion by a walk after breakfasting off bread and cheese at the cost of his friend M. Voiart or after dining with Gen. Blein. Half a century ago no one could have recognized, in the gray-haired, wrinkled old man, the brilliant young officer who stands brandishing his sword on high with his left hand clasped on his heart singing "Aux arms, citoyens," on the market-place of Choisy-le-Roi. Among the persons invited by the municipality was M. Amedee Rouget de l'Isle, the nephew of the hero of the day, and bearing a striking resemblance to his uncle, if one may judge from the portraits of the time. The nephew looked round at the declarations and at the manifestation, which was more political than personal, and explained, with all the authority of one who has written from authentic documents the life and memoirs of the author of the "Marseillaise," that his uncle was not a republican, and that his family were royalists, who had given their support to the cause of constitutional monarchy. When Rouget de l'Isle wrote his famous poem, which has been adopted as the national anthem by the republic, it was modestly entitled the "Chant de Guerre," and composed for the army of the Rhine.

A number of anecdotes were related about the life and habits of the little old man whose Alsatian costume and poverty covered the auther of the song which has become the war cry of the revolution, and which sounded in the ears of the old aristocracy as they marched proudly and disdainfully to the scaffold. The secret of his long and lonely life has been told. It is said that he was very fond of fireworks, and was a clever pyrotechnist. He was paying his attentions to a young lady at Courbevoie, and one Sunday when he was invited to dine by the parents of his intended he took some fireworks with him and promised to let them off in the morning. Before he left he kept his promise, and the young lady with her parents, repaired to the garden. The stick of one of the rockets fell so unfortunately that the young girl was mortally wounded, and died within a few days, to the inexpressible grief of her lover. He remained faithful of her memory, and is said never again to have smiled on a woman. The garret where Rouget de l'Isle died is still to be seen, and when the owner of the house tells those who call on him the story of the man whom Choisy-le-Roi delighted to honor, it was impossible not to remember the anecdote told by M. de la Ferriere. One day Brig. Gen. Rouget de L'Isle was talking to Mme. Dolouriere and one of the ladies of honor to Queen Marie Amele at Lyons. The ladies, who had heard of the manner in which the general had struggled to obtain promotion, were surprised to learn that the so'dier was about to be placed on the half-pay list with out the brevet rank which would increase the pension to which he was already entitled. They asked him how he could account for having been forgotten by the restoration and Louis Philippe. "Oh, family affairs, ladies! family affairs!" said the general. He was pressed for a further explanation, and then said that the small amount of interest he had hoped to have commanded had been taken from him by the conduct and notoriety of one of his nieces, a daughter of his brother. "What niece?" asked the ladies, anxious to know her name. "The Marseillaise!" replied the general, who was at once understood, for the hymn of Rouget de l'Isle will even in France be associated with the hideous scenes enacted on the Place de la Revolution and with the horrors committed in the provinces by the butchers and iconoclasts; who sang it as they violated God's altar and slew his priests.—Paris Letter to the London Globe.

Why she Talked to the Fly Screen Man.

She knew he was the fly screen man by the samples under his arm, but she held the door open and permitted him to say:

"Madam, I notice that you haven't a fly screen at any door or window."

"Not a one," she answered.

"You must be overrun with flies?"

"We are."

"Flies are a terrible nuisance?"

"Yes, indeed."

"And this seems to be a good locality for mosquitoes?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

"I presume they bother you nights?"

"Very much."

"And a great deal of dust blows into a house not protected by screens?"

"A great deal, sir."

"And how many windows have you in the house?"

"Sixteen."

"Each one ought to have a half size."

"Yes, sir."

"And I can make them cheaper for you than any other man in the business."

"I think you can."

"Do you prefer plain green or figured?"

"Well, I always did like plain green."

"Very well; I will measure the windows and take your order."

"You needn't trouble yourself any further," she quietly replied.

"What! Don't you want screens."

"No, sir. The other day the woman across the street had ten minutes' conversation with a tin peddler, and she's had her nose in the air over me ever since. A fly-screen man is about three times as high as a potato man, and I've been talking with you to let her see that she isn't the only lady in town who can put on airs. She's mad as a hen by this time, and now you get up and dust or I'll have my dog run you clear to the river.—Detroit Free Press.

Montreal has had another sensation in the shape of an action for defamation of character brought by a notorious courtesan against one of the city journals. As the proprietors of the paper in question are prepared to justify their statements and are about to subpoena witnesses, a general stampede of high-toned frequenters of the plaintiff's house has taken place.

MANAGEMENT OF CATTLE.

Prof. Brown's Experiment at the Guelph Model Farm.

[From the Advance Report of the Experimental Department Ontario Agricultural College.]

Any branch of science that is intimately related to the more prominent necessaries of human life must be the most interesting of all sciences. The beauties of study in astronomy and geology cannot, for example, compare in intrinsic value with animal physiology and chemistry as taught through the upbuilding of a fattening steer and of a bushel of wheat; yet the discoverer of a planet or of a new compound secures the world's applause, as against the producer of improved food for man. That this will always be so is not evident, because, as the world becomes more practical, it will also become more honest in the distribution of favours that bear upon the every-day comforts of its people.

THE PURPOSE OF CATTLE FATTENING

is to obtain the largest quantity of the best quality of beef, at the least cost, under three years of age.

To aim at breeding, raising and fattening one cattle beast from every ten cultivated acres of the province.

To grow all the food required for these purposes within ourselves.

The animals to weigh alive not less than 1,500 pounds each.

The net cost of production, giving credit for manure, not to exceed five cents per pound, live weight.

To obtain one ton of manure per month from each cattle beast over two years old, when stabled to finish the fattening process.

The value of such manure, under the best management, to be made worth $2.50 per ton.

THE ANIMAL IN CATTLE FATTENING.

In any case it is desirable to have:

Purity of sire;

A certain age and sex;

A quiet disposition;

Quality, as indicated by fine head and ears, fine bone, horn, tail, and a medium thick skin, having plenty of fine, soft, silky hair, with mellowness;

A weight-carrying frame;

Such a breed will mature, or pre-mature, from two to three years of age;

Having the character of doing best upon Ontario pastures;

Giving the best quality of flesh, with least offal;

Sure breeders and good nurses;

The Shorthorn grade is best for weight, early maturity, and stall-feeding;

The Hereford grade is best for hardiness and grazing disposition;

The Aberdeen Poll grade is best for an even average of all requirements;

The Galloway grade is best for extreme hardiness and quality of flesh;

The Devon grade is best for good nursing and sure breeding.

THE FOOD OF FATTENING CATTLE.

Its use is to:—

Keep up animal heat, or life;

Repair the waste;

Increase growth;

Produce flesh and fat.

Its value is affected by:—

The particular breed;

Age of the animal;

Individual character;

Conditions of life, such as temperature;

Management.

In growing our own cattle food, the first question should be, How much beef can we get per acre? the second, How much manure are we able to return?

The amount of increase that may be calculated upon as the produce of certain quantities and kinds of food depends upon paragraphs eight to thirty.

Chemically, we can calculate upon getting one pound of flesh from any food that has ten parts of dry substances in its composition; thus, 100 pounds of Swede turnip, having as much as ninety parts of water, will only give the pound of flesh, while 100 pounds of corn, having only thirteen parts of water, will give ten pounds of flesh.

Practically, foods give results according to their chemical analysis, when combined, or mixed, to suit the particular animal system.

For example, a mixture of corn, peas and oats will give better results than corn alone, although seven per cent. lower in nutritive properties.

Never forget the difference between "life" food and "fattening" food; starch and sugar keep up heat and life, and unless they are supplied along with fats and oils the fattening process will be slower, because heat and life would have to be supplied from the fats and oils; if given in excess starch and sugar will produce fat on animals.

A young animal, building its bone and muscle, requires different kinds and quantities of food from the more mature one. Hay, straw and other fodders are best for the immature animal; they are also heat and fat makers, and would fatten alone, though slowly.

Rapid growth and much fat are opposed to each other; so, to grow carcase and also fatten early, requires bone-forming and fat-forming materials—they must go together.

A maturing animal—cattle two to three years old—having built the most of its frame, requires less fodders and more flesh and fat-formers. Grain in many forms is therefore best for finishing fattening cattle.

From birth to the time a cattle beast is ripe, the daily rate of increase on an average should not be less than one and one-half pounds—thus, a three-year old should weigh 1,600 pounds; a two and one-half-year-old, 1,360; and a two-year-old 1,100 pounds alive.

But, in fact, the daily rate of increase is more up to two years than at any time afterwards. A two-year-old, well done to, will weigh 1,400, and if carried on to three years will not scale less than 1,800 pounds. This may be called pre-maturing.

Very much, then, of the success of obtaining big weights in a short time lies in a knowledge of individual character and the proper proportions and kinds of food.

The best kind of permanent pasture—a mixture of certain grasses and clovers—under favourable conditions, will give a greater daily increase than any other form of food.

A two-year-old cattle beast put to such pasture on May 15, when it weighs 1,100 pounds, will stand 1,400 on Oct. 1 following. The addition of grain under such circumstances does not add correspondingly to weight, though it does so on comparatively poor pasture.

Proper shelter and water on pasture means forty per cent. of the increase.

Where no first-class pasture at pasture is kept, it is desirable to provide for short commons by having a regular supply of green fodders; feed these either upon the fields or by "soiling."

Soiling fattening cattle in Ontario implies the production of one animal per acre, in place of three acres of ordinary pasture maintaining one; the principal soiling crops are corn, lucerne, red clover, tares and oats, rye and rape.

When it is desired to prepare for exhibitions or for extra condition at Christmas, soiling, in a loose box, all summer, in addition to grain, cannot be surpassed by any other form of feeding.

Straw cut and slightly fermented is one-fourth more valuable for fattening.

Green oat straw and pea straw together are about equal in value to hay.

Thirty-five pounds swede turnips, six pounds clover hay, and 2½ pounds oil cake will produce one pound of beef.

One ton of fermented cut straw and two hundred pounds oil cake is equal to one ton of hay.

Six pounds hay, one pound bran, twenty pounds turnips and five pounds corn meal will add one pound to the weight of a good two-year old steer.

Six pounds hay, one pound bran, twenty pounds turnips and six pounds pea meal will do the same thing.

The like quantities of hay, bran, turnips, and 7½ pounds crushed oats, will do the same thing.

Corn, peas, oats and barley will pay to fatten cattle, when not over one cent. per pound in the market.

Barley meal gives a fine finish and sleek, mellow handling.

In soiling, green fodder is safer when cut and mixed with cut straw or hay, allowed to slightly ferment and sprinkled with meal.

It is still an unsettled question whether cooked food or raw food is best for cattle fattening.

All animals fatten cheaper and faster on prepared raw food, as against whole or uncut hay and roots.

Every animal that chews the cud must have bulk; it is not enough to give sufficient nutritive value in small quantities; the stomach must be filled to give material for ruminating.

Most foods are better in combination than alone.

Combine so as to have little or no waste.

Fat-producing and flesh-producing food together will give sixty per cent. more increase than when given singly.

For young cattle give one of flesh to eight of heat producing substances, and to older ones give one to six.

Most food of young cattle goes to make-up bone and muscle, leaving third-class manure.

Most food of half-grown animals goes to make flesh, leaving second-class manure.

Most food of mature animals goes to make fat and support life, the excess becoming first-class manure.

Exclusive of water chemically, animals coming to maturity will eat about one-fiftieth of their own weight per day.

THE MANAGEMENT OF FATTENING CATTLE.

Most animals eat in proportion to their weight, under average conditions of age, temperature and fatness.

All animals increase in weight in proportion to the quantity and character of the food consumed, if fed exactly according to breed, size and condition of surroundings.

Give fattening cattle as much as they will eat, and often—five times a day.

Never give rapid changes of food, but change often.

A good guide for the safe quantity of grain per day to maturing cattle is one pound to every hundred of their weight; thus, an animal weighing 1,000 may receive ten pounds of grain.

Early stall feeding in the fall will make the winter's progress more certain by thirty per cent.

Give as much water and salt at all times as they will take.

In using roots, it is one guide to give just so much, in association with other things, so that the animal will not take any water.

In building, have warmth with complete ventilation, without currents, never under 40°, nor over 70° Fah.

A cold, damp, airy temperature causes animals to consume more food without corresponding results in bone, muscle, flesh or fat, much being used as fuel to keep up warmth.

Stall-feeding is better for fat-making than box or yard management, irrespective of health.

The growing animal, intended for beef, requires a little exercise daily to promote muscle and strength of constitution; when ripe, only so much as to be able to walk to market.

Currying daily is equal to seven per cent. of the increase.

Keep the temperature of the body about 100°, not under 95°, nor over 105° Fah.

Don't forget that one animal's meat may be another animal's poison.

It takes three days' good food to make up for one bad one.

The faster the fattening, the more the profits; less food, earlier returns, and better flesh.

Get rid of every fattening cattle beast before it is three years old.

Every day an animal is kept, after being prime, there is loss exclusive of manure.

The external evidences of primeness are full rumps, flanks, twist, pulse, shoulder vein and eye.

A good cattle man means a difference of one-fourth. He should know the likes and dislikes of every animal.

It pays to keep one man in constant attendance on thirty head of fattening cattle.

Immediately an animal begins to fret for food, immediately it begins to lose flesh; never check the fattening process.

Never begin fattening without a definite plan.

A steady, frosty winter is better than an open one for cattle fattening in Ontario.

There is no loss in feeding a cattle beast well for the sake of the manure alone.

No cattle beast whatever will pay for the direct increase to its weight from the consumption of any kind or quality of food—the manure must be properly valued.

On an average it costs, on charging every possible item, twelve cents for every additional pound added to the weight of a two or three-year-old fattening cattle beast.

In this country the market value of store cattle can be increased thirty-six per cent. during six months of the fattening finish.

In order to secure a sure profit, no store cattle beast, of the right stamp and well done to, can be sold at less than 4½ cents per pound, live weight.

In the finishing of a two-year-old for beef, during the last six months of winter its financial history consists of three things of nearly proportionate values:—

(1) Value of animal, previous to entry for finishing, 1,200 pounds at 5 cents....	$ 60 00
(2) Cost (not value) of food for six months	35 00
	$ 95 00
(3) Total value of fattened cattle, 1,500 lbs. at 7 cents	$105 00
Cash profit..................	10 00
(4) Value of manure produced..........	30 00
Total profit........................	$ 40 00

During winter feed thus for finishing:—

First month—Common turnips, 40 pounds; straw, cut, 7 pounds; hay, cut, 5 pounds; oats, crushed, 5 pounds.

Second and third months—Swede turnips, 40 lbs; hay, cut, 7 pounds; straw, cut, 3 pounds; corn, 8 pounds; bran, 2 pounds.

Fourth and fifth months—Swedes and mangels, 50 pounds; hay, 10 pounds; corn and peas, 10 pounds; bran, 3 pounds.

Sixth month—Mangels and swedes, 50 pounds; hay, 12 pounds; corn, peas and oats, 12 pounds; bran, 3 pounds; oil cake, 3 pounds.

A Woman on Woman.

Upon the whole, it is a dreadful bother to be a woman, and to do the business up in good shape.

In the first place, you've got to look well, or else you're nobody. A man may be homely, and still popular. Whiskers cover up most of his face, and if he has a large mouth nobody mistrusts it; and if he has wrinkles, bad on his forhead, his friends speak of his many cares, and of his thoughtful disposition, and tell each other that his wrinkles are lines of thought. Lines of thought, indeed! when in all probability his forehead is wrinkled by the habit he has of scowling at his wife when the coffee isn't strong enough.

A woman must always be in good order throughout. Her hair must be frizzed and banged as fashion demands, and she must powder if she has a shining skin; and she must manage to look sweet, no matter how sour she may feel; and she must hang just so, and her laces must be always spotless, and her boot buttons must be all in place, and her finger-nails clean, and she mustn't whistle nor climb fences, nor stone cats, nor swear when she's mad.

She can't go out alone, because she must be protected. She can't go anywhere when it rains, because her hair won't stay crimped, and she'll get mud on her petticoats and things. She can't be a Free Mason, because she would tell their secrets and everybody would know about that goat and that gridiron. She can't smoke, because it wouldn't be feminine. She can't go courting, because it is unwomanly. But she must get married before 30, or everybody will feel wronged. People will sigh over her and wonder why it is that the men "don't seem to take," and all the old maids and widows will smile significantly—and keep quiet.

It is everybody's business who a woman marries. The whole neighborhood put their heads together and talk over the pros and cons and decide whether she is good enough for him. And they criticise the shape of her nose and the way she does up her hair, and relate how lazy her grandfather was and how her Aunt Sally sold beans and buttermilk.

A woman must wear No. 2 boots on No. 3 feet, and she must manage to dress well on seventy-five cents a week; she mustn't be vain and she must be kind to the poor, and go regularly to the sewing society meetings, and be ready to dress dolls, make aprons and tidies for church fairs.

She must always have the masculine buttons in the family sewed on so that they never will come off while in use, and she must keep the family hosiery so that everybody would mistrust that there were toes inside of the stockings when they are on.

She must hold herself in continual readiness to find everything her husband has lost—and a man never knows where anything is. He will put his boots away on the parlor sofa, and when he has hunted for them half an hour he will appear to his wife with a countenance like that of an avenging angel and demand to know "What she has done with his boots?"

She must shut all the doors after her lord and master, and likewise the bureau drawers, for a married man was never known to shut a drawer. It would be as unnatural as for a hen to go in swimming for recreation.

Ah, there are a good many tricks in the trade of what is called "living together!"

A woman is expected to take care of the baby even after the first infantile wonder multiplies into a round dozen. And if he doubles up with the colic, or the trials of cutting teeth, necessary evils of the mumps and measles, and scarlet fever and rash, and throat distemper, and short sleeves and bare legs, and pins sticking into him, and too much candy, and a bad temper, why, her husband tells her that "he does wish she'd try to quiet her baby." And he says it just as if he fully believed that she alone was responsible for its existence; and as if he thought she was considerably to blame for it, too.

We might go on indefinitely with the troubles being a woman brings; and if there is a man in the world who thinks a woman has an easy time of it, why just let him pin a pound of false hair to his head, and get inside a new pair of corsets and put on a pull-back overskirt, and be a woman himself, and see how he likes it.

The gigantic oak on Mount Vernon known as "Washington's Oak," was destroyed by lightning the other day. The tree had many historic associations, and Washington's favorite resting place after the heat and labors of the day was beneath its shade.

THURSDAY, AUG. 31.

THE STANDARD.

The Flesherton Advance whines that it had not received the minutes of Osprey council for last week's issue. The editor knows very well what the understanding is between the Osprey clerk, and four district newspapers, each of which was to receive the minutes in turn, and send early proof copies to the rest, so that the minutes could appear simultaneously in all four papers. Nothing could be more fair to the papers concerned, or to the ratepayers of Osprey than this arrangement. It worked well till the Flesherton Advance man got hold of the copy, when the proof arrived either the same day or a day after the arrival of the Advance containing the minutes. We received the August minutes Thursday noon, but would not take any advantage by publishing them. We posted the Osprey minutes to the three papers concerned on Saturday.

That side-walk promised to station has not been built yet. Probably the village police have been too busily engaged looking after the back yards.

Why not levy a rate and finish the side-walks?

When will the inspector or pathmaster look after the cutting of the Canadian thistles on some of the village lots? When the'ye done seeding.

It will soon be necessary to appoint a police magistrate here.

Too many young people congregate upon the steps of the churches, pass remarks on the people as they enter; converting the church entrances into bummers roosts.

The army worm has settled in this section of country. This is a terrible scourge, and the only cure is to cut off the branches and burn them together with the net-work, eggs, insects, &c.

Many of those who went to Manitoba to become millionaires have returned. Chickens always come home to roost.

A train of 5 or 6 cars containing the Owen Sound Methodist and Presbyterian Sabbath Schools rolled into this village last Friday morning. The picniceers wandered about, and seemed to forget what they came for. They had no picnic worth mentioning, and where the pleasure came in we failed to see. It takes Markdale people to get up a picnic.

Some of the Owen Sound picnicers seemed to have expected to find a lake Superior at Markdale.

Numbers of the visitors from Owen Sound last Friday spent the greater part of the hot day in the heated cars on the siding. This was an Owen Sounders idea of pleasure!

The Methodist Sunday School has in course of preparation a sacred cantata, "Under the Palm," a performance of which is expected in October. Mr Bowes will wield the baton.

Mr Wm. Lakins, Mulmer Tp, has a cherry tree which bears fruit thrice a year.

Rev. N. McDiarmid has been off for a week's holiday.

Who runs the police trusteeship of Markdale?

The next time the police get a lawyer to defend their cases, it would be well to have one who has some little respect for a minister of the gospel.

When did the police trustees hold a meeting? Ratepayers wish to see minutes of their recorded proceedings. Some people say no meeting has yet been held.

The police inspector is alone in the responsibility of his inspection tour, the issning of the summonses, the engaging of a lawyer to add insult to injury; be had no authority from the other trustees.

The question arises, Who'll have to pay the piper?

Mr Chisholm has been driven from his Meaford elevator scheme by the Meaford blockheads; there is some probability that Thornbury will benefit at Meaford's expense.

Some of the Thornbury people went for a vachting trip the other evening. Report says they took abundance of refreshments, and they lost their way.

Extensive preparations are being made to re-build the elevators, and the erection and completion is being proceeded with speedily, in order to be prepared for the fall trade.

Don't drag on a miserable existence when you can get the Standard for $1 per annum.

Eugenia.

On the evening of the 22nd, after we were comfortably roosted, and were ruminating on what items of news we were to send you, lo. a great noise disturbed our cogitations. It was what sailors call 'muggy,' just such a night as Tam O'Shanter was out in, when a

Chiel might easily understan',
The Deil had business on his han'.

About 10 o'clock we heard the report of a gun, and thought that some poor dog had got more within him than he bargained for, still bang, bang, bang, went the cannons, followed by some unearthly sounds as if Arabis Bedouin troops had retreated hither.

We believe Eugenia can stump the country round for a genuine Charivari.

Mr Heron of the Eugenia House is doing all he says in his advertisement for the comfort and convenience of visitors. In the course of time Eugenia will profit by this enterprise. People would go oftener to Eugenia if they knew how well the bodily wants of man and beast could be attended to at this hostelry.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

The "Advance" SEEKS to run Osprey Council.

Sir,—This is the answer to the Advance's question as to who runs the Osprey Council.

Someone skilled in physic ought to give th Advance a soothing dose, or it will be in danger of bilious fever now that the warm weather, and green apples are upon us.

Ever since the Advance was passed over in the Osprey printing contract, it has lost no opportunity of slandering the clerk, whom by insinuation it accused of receiving bribes from Mr Rutherford. This I denied, and again repeat the denial. Mr Rutherford has not directly or indirectly offered or promised me any commission whatever, nor have I ever received any.

The Advance of the 17th waxeth wroth, and threatens dire vengeance. Because the notice of posting the Voters' List was not sent to the Advance, it states that this disfranchises every voter in Osprey. What nonsense! Further it states that "the statutes compel him (the clerk) to send the notice to us, (the Advance)." This is false. The statutes neither compels nor directs me so to do. I might have sent it to Owen Sound or Thornbury, &c. The intention of the Act is to let voters know when the List is first posted up, and I maintain that I took the best means of doing so.

The Advance neglects to quote the section which provides that "the performance by the clerk of the duties required of him shall be DIRECTORY ONLY, and the non-performance by him of said duties, shall not render null and void or inoperative any of the Lists in this Act mentioned."

This is an important notice, and should it fail to appear in the issue immediately following the first posting, Osprey would be disfranchised, (according to the Advance logic) Now the Advance is not always punctual in the performance of its work. The Council of a Municipality "next" to Osprey ordered its clerk to get schedules printed at Advance office, and the result was that the pathmasters "next" to Osprey got their lists on foolscap ruled and written by the clerk!

Fancy a Clerk having to work night and day writing 100 or more Road Lists through the Advance's delay!

If the Advance ordered a new coat, and on opening the parcel found only the lining, and part of that old and borrowed, would he call that a new coat? No more is the Advance, published in municipalty next to Osprey, but only the lining, and pieces of that old and borrowed.

Why does the Advance use such expressions as "sweep," "nice man!" wily clerk." &c. Partly because the Council passed it by in awarding the printing contract. Let it shew when or where I trreated the council, individually or collectively, with contempt; or meddle with the Advance establishment till I was slanderously attacked.

In its issue of the 24th it asks, 'How does it happen that the STANDARD gets Osprey minutes to publish and we do not? Is this another dodge of the wily Clerk? We pause for reply?"

This statement is false. I offered to send minutes in rotation to Standard, Review, Advance and Messenger; the paper receiving to send proof sheets to the others, so that all might publish at the same time. On the 5h June the minutes for 31st May and Court of Revision were in Flesherton Post Office for Advance. How is it the minutes were so long in appearing in Advance? and how was it the others were unable to publish till the following week? Why does Advance seek to create discord in Osprey by introducing politics into the municipal contest? I pause for a reply.

The Advance lets the real secret of its temper peep out. "The Clerk is a Grit!" Oh, horrible crime! And "of the first water!" Worse!! And without leave of the Advance. Crime of crimes!!

CLERK OF OSPREY.

Mr. Creighton, of the O. S. Times, and Mr. Little of the Advertiser have both joined the press association excursion to Manitoba, Mr. Rutherford is away at the Saulte. Owen Sound just now must be quite a literary desert.

THE EASTERN CAMPAIGN

The results of the engagements of Thursday and Friday followed by the severe fighting of Saturday appear to have been more important than was at first anticipated. If our men were roughly used the Egyptians were badly cut up and then rout was complete. The enemy fled in disorder, throwing away their arms and accoutrements. Sir Garnet Wolseley is determined to give the enemy no time to recover from his reserves. He will divide his force, leaving a brigade under General Graham to invest Arabi's stronghold at Tel-el-Kebir, and will himself advance with the main body of his army upon Cairo.

A sort of volcanic eruption taken place in a certain portion of our town lately and threatening the overthrow of blacksmith shops, private dwellings, picket fences, side walks, and various other property, the strangest feature of the affair is that the crater of this volcano should be a notorious "jar of preserves" which was thoughtlessly removed from its cool cellar home, and placed in such a high temperature, during the summer of 1880 that violent fermentation has been going on ever since.

THE CLOSING OF THE

MARKDALE CIRCUS.

Who'll pay the Piper

At the adjourned court held at the Revere House, yesterday, Wednesday, before Justices Elliott, and Struthers, decisions were given in the cases in inspector Reid had proceeded against a number of people for violating the Health and Police Acts.

All the cases under the former Act were dismissed or withdrawn, but in two cases, Wm. Brown, J.P., and W. J. McFarland, the summonses were under the Police Act, which provides for the cleanliness of the streets; they were each fined $1 00 and costs, total $4.10.

We will refer more fully to this matter next week, and also to Mr. W. Brown's expressed method of administering the law.

We had the pleasure of a chat with our Townsman Mr. W. F. Doll, who has just returned from a two weeks visit to New York City and Coney Island what with comming in contact with the bracing air at the sea beach and the wide awake business men of New York we expect to see a big Boom in the Jewelery Business here for some time.

Quick as a wink is the way photos. are being taken at Browne's gallery.

Mr. Bellamy, Flesherton has purchased the good will of the loan, insurance, conveyancing business lately carried on by Davis & Belamy. Mr. Bellamy will endeavour by low rates, and close personal attention to business to merit public patronage.

Mr. Storey, a lively gentleman of considerable ability is pushing the insurance and kindred business at Flesherton.

Messrs Trimble & Wright are determined to do an extensive business, if an exceedingly large stock, and low prices will do it. It is remarkable the distance many come to make purchases, and return saying, "it pays to lose a day in order to get such bargains, we'll come again."

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

'THE MINUTE-HAND OF THE CLOCK.'

A German Boy's Adventure.

BY DAVID KER.

"Kaspar, thou little rogue, how often shall I tell thee not to meddle with that clock?"

"I was only watching the wheels go round, father," said a sturdy little fellow in soiled leathern jacket, starting up with a half-mischievous look in his blue eyes.

"And what hast thou to do with the wheels, eh? Suppose the clock is stopped or put wrong some day by one of thy tricks, what shall I, Hans Scheller, custodian of St. Martin's Church, say to the Town Council? Dost thou know what birch porridge is, thou rogue? Beware, or I'll give thee such a taste of it as shall make thee go round faster than the wheels."

Poor Hans was indeed kept in constant terror by his inquiring son's uncontrollable habit of going wherever he ought not. The old church of St. Martin was a famous playground for any boy, with its shadowy aisles, and countless pillars, and tall towers, and deep niches, and half-ruined battlements; and the worthy custodian, when he awoke from his after-dinner nap in his little room at the foot of the great clock tower, never knew whether he should find his hopeful boy hiding behind the altar-screen, trying to blow the organ bellows, or playing hide-and seek among the pinnacles of the roof, or sitting astride of a carved spout a hundred and sixty feet above the pavement.

All this, however, might have been forgiven; for the old custodian was really as fond of his "little rogue" as the boy, with all his wildness, was of him. But this one thing that Hans could not pardon was the danger caused by his son's restless inquisitiveness to his beloved church clock. It was his pride and glory to be able to tell everyone that during the whole forty years that he had been in charge of the "St. Martin's Kirche," the clock had never stopped or gone wrong; and nothing would convince him that it was not by far the finest clock in the whole world.

"Don't tell me of the big clock of Strasburg Cathedral," he would say with an obstinate shake of his grey head. "Could it go forty years on end, think you, without the slightest deviation? No, that it couldn't, nor any other clock on the face of the earth except this one."

Mindful of Kaspar's inquiring turn of mind his father, having to do some marketing in the town the day after our hero's stolen visit to the clock, locked the door of the tower, and took the key along with him.

"No harm can happen now," he muttered; "and in any case, I shall be back before he gets out of school."

But, as ill-luck would have it, the teacher was called away by some business that afternoon, and the boys got out of school more than an hour earlier than usual. Kaspar, finding his father gone, went straight to the door of the clock tower, and looked rather blank on discovering that it was locked. But he was not one to be easily stopped when he had once made up his mind. Getting out upon the roof, and crawling along a cornice where only a cat or a schoolboy could have found footing, he crept through an air-hole right into the clock-room.

For some time he was as happy as a child in a toy-shop, running from one marvel to another, until at length he discovered another hole, and thrusting his head through it, found himself looking down upon the market-place through the face of the clock itself. But when he tried to withdraw his head again, it would not come.

It was such a queer scrape to be in that Kaspar was more inclined to laugh than to be frightened; but suddenly a thought struck him which scared him in earnest; his neck was in the track of the minute-hand, which, when it reached him, must inevitably tear his head off.

Poor Kaspar! it was too late now to wish that he had left the clock alone. He tried to scream for help, but with his neck in that cramped position, the cry that he gave was scarcely louder than the chirp of a sparrow. He struggled desperately to writhe himself back through the hole; but a piece of woodwork had slipped down upon the back of his neck, and held him like a vise.

On came the destroyer, nearer and nearer still, marking off with its measured tick his few remaining moments of life. And all the while the sun was shining gayly, the tiny flags were fluttering on the booths of the market, and the merry voices of his school-fellows who were playing in the market-place came faintly to his ears, while he hung there helpless, with death stealing upon him inch by inch. His head grew dizzy, and the measured beat of the ticking sounded like the roll of a muffled drum, while the coming hand of the clock looked like a monstrous arm outstretched to seize him, and the carved faces on the spouts seemed to grin and gibber at him in mockery. And still the terrible hand crept onward, nearer, nearer, nearer.

"What can that thing in the clock face be?" said a tourist below, pointing his spy-glass upward. "Why, I declare it looks like a boy's head!"

"A boy's head!" cried a gray-haired watchmaker beside him (one of Hans Scheller's special friends,) snatching hastily at the glass as he spoke. "Why, good gracious! it's little Kaspar. He'll be killed!" And he rushed toward the church, shouting like a madman.

The alarm spread like wild-fire, and before Klugmann, the watchmaker, had got half-way up the stairs leading to the tower, more than a score of excited men were scampering at his heels. But at the top of the stairs they were suddenly brought to a stand-still by the locked door.

"It's locked!" cried Klugmann in tones of horror, "and Hans must have taken the key with him, for it isn't here."

"Never mind the key," roared a brawny smith behind him. "Pick up that beam, comrades, and run it against the lock. All together now!"

Crash went the door, in rushed the crowd, and Kaspar, now senseless from sheer fright, was dragged out of his strange prison just as the huge bar of the minute-hand actually touched his neck. And so it fell out that poor old Scheller, coming home for a quiet afternoon nap, found the door of the tower smashed in, his son lying in a swoon, and his little room crowded with strange men all talking at once.

But from that day forth Kaspar Scheller never meddled with the church clock again.

THE POLKA DOT RAGE.

An Unprecedented Demand for One Line of Goods.

"It is astonishing what a demand there is for polka dot dress goods," said a dry goods merchant last week. "Old and young women run here every day for polka dot cloth, and the run has exhausted our supply several times already this season. The blue and white goods, with small spots, were all the rage at first, but now we are asked for black and white, with large dots. It is a sensible fashion, however. You see the polka dot dresses look neat and dressy, and yet they do not show the dirt as the lawn dresses do. Another thing worth notice is the fact that no great dusters are needed when a lady wears polka dot goods. I think the prettiest style is the wearing of polka dot waists over white and colored skirts, but the rage appears to be now for full suits of the polka dot. It is a cheap, dressy, cool and serviceable style of goods, and I am not surprised at the increasing demand for it. Yesterday I was told by one of the oldest wholesale dry goods dealers in New York that in fifty years he had never had such a demand for one line of goods in a single season. He said that thousands of ladies had ordered the polka dot goods for seaside and mountain wear, and he felt confident that it was pushing lawns to the wall. His idea was that the polka dots were boosted into fashion by the Malley trial, when the Malley boys wore polka neckties and Blanche Douglass had on a polka dot waist a part of the time in court. The women folks were interested in that trial, in the fate of Jennie Cramer, as well as in the other sensational elements of the affair, and the fashion makers in New York speedily made polka dots a feature of their Spring and Summer styles. However that may be, it is a fact there is a wonderful call for the polka dot dress goods, scarfs and ties, ribbons and waist belts, and polka dot neckties and scarfs for the men."

Late News Notes at Home and Abroad.

Engineer Melville and the seamen Ninderman and Noros, the survivors of the Jeannette, have arrived at Moscow, where they met with a grand reception.

A leading Montreal bank has crop reports from its agencies throughout Ontario which give very encouraging accounts of the yield of the present harvest, which is set down generally above the average.

The agricultural distress in Spain is assuming alarming proportions in Andalusia in consequence of the poor harvest and want of labor. Frequent collisions occur between the peasantry and police.

An investigation of the Westgate affair is going on between the Venezuelan government and the British Ministry privately. The British steamer "Fantome" has gone to Laguayra and the captain has proceeded to Caracas.

Dr. Gorbat, an Englishman, left Zermatt on Friday last, with two guides, to ascend the Dent Blanche. All three were found dead on Sunday, having fallen from a precipice. This is the fourth such accident that has occurred this season.

The Empress of Germany is confined to her apartments in consequence of injuries which she received by a fall while walking in the Schloss of Babelsberg a short time ago. Some anxiety is felt concerning her condition, but a speedy recovery is hoped for.

The Corean troubles have culminated in a general insurrection, during which the King and Queen were both assassinated, and the Japanese legation was attacked by natives belonging to the anti-foreign party. Japanese men-of-war have been despatched to the scene of action.

One recent evening two men entered the First National Bank in Kewanee, Ill., locked the cashier and a lady assistant in the vault, and carried off $20,000. The crime was discovered by pedestrians hearing the cashier pounding on the vault. Citizens scoured the country in every direction.

A deputation of Maori chiefs from New Zealand are in London trying to lay before the Queen a narrative of the wrongs under which they are perishing. The Government will not receive or recognise them, will not allow them to see the Queen, nor offer their petition.

A correspondent of the Standard at Madrid says the spirit of the peasantry is becoming strongly Socialistic in the provinces noted since the revolution of 1868 for the republican tendency of their large towns. The press says the state of affairs in Andalusia is serious and requires prompt remedy. All the relief doled out by the Government in Andalusia, Estramadura, Galicia, Aragon, and Catalonia has proved unavailing. Several acts of brigandage have occurred near Granada.

A steamer recently arrived at Victoria, B. C., with two Chinamen, from Port Townsend, Washington Territory, who arrived there on an inward bound vessel, but were refused permission to land, in accordance with the Prohibition Act passed in Congress. The captain of the ship preferred chartering a steamer and sending the Chinamen over there, rather than enter into bonds of $500 each that they should neither run away nor land. Such additions to the population are frequently expected there.

The Telephone at Alexandria.

It appears that just before the bombardment of Alexandria arrangements had been completed for the introduction of the telephone in that city. The work had been done by Mr. H. H. Eldred, formerly station agent at Passaic City, N. J., who was at Malta during the bombardment, and conducted the experiments by which the firing was heard through 1,000 miles of ocean cable. The experiments were suddenly terminated by the explosion of a shell from the 81 ton guns in the cellar of the Alexandria central office.

Prince Henry of Prussia will start on a voyage around the world next October. He will probably be away a year and a half, and spend most of the time cruising in the West Indies and round the South American coast.

PERSONALITIES.

Pleasant Paragraphs about Prominent People.

Lord Randolph Churchill, M. P., recently underwent an operation for a painful malady.

Victor Hugo is revising for the press a play with Mazarin for its hero, the first draft of which was written nearly forty years ago.

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge has let Dr. Alois Brandl have access, for his work on Coleridge, to all the letters of Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Southey addressed to the late Sir John Coleridge. The Coleridge letters cover nearly all of the poet's career and begin with the appeal to buy his discharge from the army.

Harrison Ainsworth's library will be sold this month in London. It includes most of the manuscript of one of the most prolific novelists of modern times, "Rookwood," "Jack Shephard," and "Boscobel" being among the number; also original drawings by George Cruickshank for the illustrations of the works.

The Duke of Orleans, eldest son of the Count of Paris, took the prize for Latin composition at the annual competition of the Paris colleges. His father, amid the plaudits of a large gathering, embraced him and placed on his head the laurel wreath presented to prize winners. The Duke is thirteen.

Richard King, of Texas, is known of men in the South as the largest cultivator of cattle in the United States, if not in the world. Richard is an Irishman, and his flocks of sheep and goats, his herds of cattle, and his many horses and more mules, foot up in all 500,000 head. His ranch, the Santa Gertrudas, is seventy-five miles in length, and includes nearly the whole of two counties in Southwestern Texas.

The Princess of Wales at Goodwood looked most exquisite in ivory white with gold trimmings. She wore a pale coffee-colored Newmarket coat when she first arrived, so probably that rather neglected garment will become ton again. Quite a third of the gowns were white, and nearly another third were pale blue. Many were quite extraordinarily short, and showed very elaborate stockings and clipper-built shoes.

The Duke of Hamilton, who long ago came to pecuniary grief, and whose art treasures were recently sold out at auction for the benefit of his creditors, is described as "a great, coarse, sensual-looking, red-haired man of thirty-seven, without a feature in his face evincing intellect or refinement; without a point in his unwieldy person to indicate blood. He married one of the Duke of Manchester's daughters."

The London Spectator thinks that Lord Rosebery is likely to succeed Mr. Bright as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with a seat in the cabinet. As Under Secretary for the Home Department he has had charge of all the political duties formerly intrusted to the Lord Advocate, and Scotland has confidence in him. The Spectator says: "We doubt if any appointment would bring more strength to it eventually than that of the brilliant young Scotchman, who has shown himself to be one of the best speakers of the day, who has youth, wealth, and zeal to devote to the Liberal cause, and who is as thorough-going a Liberal as we could hope to find even in the House of Commons. Lord Rosebery probably has a great future. And it would be a useful thing to introduce a young man of his promise early into the ranks of the higher statesmen."

The Champions of Christendom.

"So they have left me to save her alone?" exclaimed Sir John of merry England. "This, after all the Frenchman's protestations and all the Italian's bluster. But what matters it? Gladstonius, my armour!" Upon this, the brave knight's squire, after a great deal of fuss and confusion (for Gladstonius was a procrastinating person), buckled on his master's sword and iron plates. And when this had been done, Sir John hurried away to Alexandria, to rescue Egypt, the fairest of the fair, from Arabi the Dragon. When Arabi saw Sir John approaching, he indulged in the most ridiculous demonstrations of impotent rage and feeble defiance.

"Very good!" said the champion of merry England. "I will teach you a lesson, my fine fellow, that shall last your life. This will I do, not only in my own interests, but for the benefit of the brothers who have deserted me!"

And the brave knight drew his sword, poised his lance, and made ready to begin. "Stay a moment I beg you!" said a fat, sleek, fawning sort of a person, whose apparel was as seedy as his appearance was unprepossessing. "You do things in such a very hurried manner." "Who are you?" was the natural question of Sir John.

"I am the Sultan Slyboots," replied the fat, fawning creature, "and I am the father of Egypt, the fairest of the fair."

"Then if you are her father, you will approve of my intentions! Stand aside while I rescue her."

"But let us chat it over a little. Whoever saves Egypt, the fairest of the fair, will have a right to claim her. Surely this seems just; do you not think so?"

"Let me save her first," said Sir John, "and we can settle the details afterward."

"But it is so much better to talk. I am very angry indeed with Arabi; but—"

"What has the Dragon dangling round its neck?" asked Sir John, sharply; "it seems like a Turkish decoration."

"Oh, yes," returned the Sultan Slyboots, with some confusion. "It is a little toy I gave him to play with. But to return to our talking——"

"I did not come here to talk," interrupted Sir John, "but to fight!"

"If you would just wait, while I——"

"Why, you unnatural parent!" thundered Sir John; "I do declare you are making signs to the Dragon while we are talking!"

"Surely, you are mistaken! My left eye-lid frequently quivers unconsciously."

But while Sultan Slyboots was explaining how his eyelid had quivered, Sir John poised his spear once more, and went for the Dragon. Arabi uttered a loud howl, and showed the White Flag, which bore a remarkable resemblance to the White Feather.—Punch.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SEASON.

(From the American Agriculturist.)

TROUBLE IN THE CLOVER STACKS.

In some localities, in the older Southern States especially, farmers who put up their clover hay in good condition, are surprised to find, when they come to feed it from the stack or mow, that it is apparently very mouldy, and hesitate to use it. A close examination shows that the appearance of mould is very deceptive, and that the whiteness is really due to great multitudes of silken threads, spun by the clover worm, (Asopia kostalis), an insect that has been brought here from the old world, but which makes itself quite at home. The insects are usually found in the greatest numbers at the bottom of the stack, and after it has once established itself, nothing can be done for the hay. The farmer who finds his clover hay in this condition, should not, another season, stack or store his crop in the same place. It has been suggested that placing the stack upon a foundation, that will allow ventilation from below, will be of service.

WORK WITH THE ROOTS

It will usually pay to go through even broadcast turnips, and thin them, and pull or cut out the strongest weeds—smart-weed, rag-weed, etc., and when roots are in drills, it is absolutely necessary. Even when roots are very backward, and the out-look is discouraging on the first of September, thinning, weeding, and hoeing will make a crop. All kinds of turnips do their best growing after cold nights are, so to speak, the order of the day. Loose earth, and full possession of the ground, are prime requisites to their doing their best.

BUCKWHEAT.

The plant is extremely sensitive to frost. The grain which is already matured, or nearly so, is not hurt, and the straw is not used for feed. The reason why frost is so injurious, may therefore not be apparent, until we think, or notice, that upon almost every plant, we have the seed in every stage of development, from the blossom, to the ripe grain. When cut before frost, a great proportion of the unripe seed will develop perfectly, and the process of ripening does not seem to be hindered by the frost after the Buckwheat is cut.

GO TO THE FAIR

The term "Fair may not always be the most appropriate one for the autumn Shows. Exhibition is a better word, but far less frequently used. Not only should the farmer go to the Fair, but he ought to take his family with him. The going, simply, is not enough. All members of the household should make it a point to take something to exhibit. One of the boys may take a fine colt, and if it is his own, there will be all the more pride in obtaining a prize. Another son may have a yoke of steers that he has trained for the exhibition. As for the girls, there are thousand different things that can be made with the needle that will grace the walls of the "Woman's Pavilion," or the rooms of the Household Department. Even so common a thing as bread may be baked with special care, and will attract much attention. Then there are the garden vegetables, potatoes—a new kind, perhaps—pumpkins, squashes, etc., and the products of the farm and orchard. It is not wise to leave all these things at home, and then criticise the Exhibition because you can say, "We have better things at home." To go and take things to the Fair is not enough. The Exhibition should become a school at which all exhibitors and visitors make a study of the implements, cattle, poultry, fruit, grain, etc., that are there. A farmer may owe his success in growing some crop to the knowledge gained at a town Fair. The farmer that has a real pride in the farm will take great interest in the local Fair, and will exhibit the best products of farm life in the boys and girls, who are interested exhibitors at the Fairs. The day at the Fair should be a social one, every one making it a point to meet many neighbors and others with a pleasant word. It is a place for asking and answering questions, and the person who goes through the Exhibition without opening his mouth, is certainly not getting all the good that is within his reach. It is our advice that all go the Fair—all take something to show, and all find out as much as possible about all the various exhibits that are made by others. In this way the day at the Fair will be a most profitable one. It may be that a premium will not be taken by every one, but the prize money is only a small part of the value that an exhibitor may receive from a Fair, that has been used as a means for a better understanding of the products of the farm, garden, and household.

PUTTING AWAY TOOLS.

The wearing out of farm implements is, as a rule, due more to neglect than to use. If tools can be well taken care of, it will pay to buy those made of the best steel, and finished in the best manner; but in common hands, and with common care, such are of little advantage. Iron and steel parts should be cleaned with dry sand and a cob, or scraped with a piece of soft iron, washed and oiled if necessary, and in a day or two cleaned off with the corn-cob and dry sand. Finally paint the iron part with rosin and beeswax, in the proportion of 4 of rosin, to 1 of wax, melted together and applied hot. This is good for the iron or steel parts of every sort of tool. Wood work should be painted with good, boiled, linseed oil, white lead and turpentine, colored of any desired tint; red is probably the best color. Keep the cattle away until the paint is dry and hard, or they will lick, with death as the result. If it is not desired to use paint on hand tools, the boiled oil with turpentine and "liquid drier," does just as well. Many prefer to saturate the wood-work of farm implements with crude Petroleum. This can not be used with color, but is applied by itself, so long as any is absorbed by the pores of the wood.

Justice North is becoming noted among English Judges by his peculiar ways of asserting the dignity of the Court. He lately astonished a lawyer in the Crown Court at Manchester, who was reading a paper, by saying that he must leave the court if he wished to indulge in the newspaper. The man put away his paper at once. Then the Judge cried out, "Leave the court!" The man departed accordingly.

Blossoms and worms together,
Till at last such havoc makes,
There is no fruit to gather.

SUNBEAMS.

King Louis has given to Wagner two well trained swans, which have drawn the small boat containing his Highness, habited as Lohengrin, on the blue moonlit waters of the lake in the neighborhood of the royal castle of Hoenswanagard.

King Alfonso has made magnificent presents to the commissioners who conveyed to him the Garter from England. The Prince of Wales received tapestries worth more than $30,000. To the others are sent specimens of Toledo arms encrusted with gold.

On an express train running between Victoria and Brighton, England, are four Pullman cars lighted with incandescent lamps supplied with electricity from Faure accumulators. The cars have electric bells also, by which the conductor or page boy may be summoned. The "covered gangway," by which the conductor may pass from car to car, is mentioned as another feature of the train.

A girl at Long Branch has hair so stiff and coarse that it does not mat when drenched. Its utility is apparent when she bathes, for others come up from a plunge with their tresses in an insignificant pigtail, while her head is as attractive as when dry. A correspondent calculates that her hair will bring her half a million dollars, because it seems to have charmed an heir to that amount, and he is likely to marry her.

At the last Prince's garden party in London the caprice of fashion was the parasol. Some specimens were of great value. There was a plague of jewels on the top of one white one which dazzled the eyes of the beholder. The Queen, whose sight had been caught by the topazes and amethysts, encircled by rows of seed pearls, with which it was adorned, turned away with manifest disapprobation, and like the angel in Moore's poem, "never looked again."

A dwarf 17 year old and hardly twenty-five inches in height was sold in France to Jean Lumeau by his father to be exhibited in a booth. His purchaser conceived the idea of establishing a miniature menagerie, with the dwarf as a tamer. He caused a number of cats to be painted so as to look like tigers, and giving the dwarf a whip, compelled him by kicks and threats to goad the cats into a furious attack. The poor little fellow was literally torn to pieces by the infuriated brutes.

Judge Edward A. Thomas discusses, in the North American Review, the value of oaths in courts. In his judgment the oath should be entirely dispensed with, as doing more harm than good. He declares that the conscientious will tell the truth, when legally called upon to do so, as thoroughly without the oath as with it, and that dishonest persons are seldom restrained by the utmost solemnity of form. In short, he believes that the oath has lost its force as a restraint, and is merely the formula of an exploded superstition.

Nellie Pickett has seen a great deal of wild life for a girl of 20. She married Tom Picket and went with him to New Mexico, where they joined the band of Billy the Kid, she, being a fine horsewoman, a crack shot, and both vivacious and pretty, is said to have ruled the gang. After Picket was killed she became the wife of Bawdry, the second in command, and when he was killed she found a third husband in Billy the Kid. Many stories are told of her exploits, whether acting as a spy in female attire or riding at the head of the band dressed in the buckskin male attire of the plains. She died a few days ago.

Had Skobeleff Lived.

What is certain about Skobeleff is that he so typified the Russian character, so fulfilled the Russian ideal, so inspired the common Russian that the masses of the soldiery not only loved him, but held him the nobler man for sacrificing them in heaps. They distinctly reverenced him more after the awful slaughter at the Gravitza redoubt, when he lost 8,000 men and failed after all, than they had done before. That is the Russian temper shown through all history toward all their military favorites—toward Suwaroff, for instance, whose hold over his soldiery was riveted, not weakened, by the awful slaughter at the storm at Ismail, as well as toward Skobeleff; and that temper places in the hands of its object very terrible resources. He wields the authority not only of the general, but of a religious leader like Mohammed; and, when he draws his recruits from a people like the Russians, can waste men with an indifference which paralyzes strategy. Such a man, so followed, can conquer in spite of science; and we do not wonder that the dread of Skobeleff among a people like the Germans, who are naturally kindly, but who understand war, suppressed the instinctive reverence for death, and that they received tidings of his fate with something of displeasing exultation. They remember what Zorndorf was, the battle in which the Russians were beaten from the first, but died in such masses that Frederick's army nearly perished in the huge killing; and they knew that with Skobeleff in command, if war broke out, Zorndorfs on a gigantic scale were more than possible. The Russian people would have formed column behind Skobeleff, till in defeating him, even if science had conquered in the end, Germany might have suffered as in the Thirty Year's War.—The Spectator.

Testing Silks.

Every woman should understand the method of testing silks. There are two ways of doing this. Note the closeness and evenness of the rib in it, and hold it to the light to see this the better. This shows the texture. Then crush it in the hand and release it suddenly. Note if it springs out quickly and leaves no crease behind, that is the verve. The quality of the silk is denoted by the verve. The Italian silk is the softest in the world, and often wanting in stiffness of appearance. The Chinese silk is the poorest and deficient in verve. And again, there is a great deal of silk manufactured adulterated with a material called jute, which is interwoven in the fibre of the silk. This manufacture will be found, when tested as I have tested, to be very deficient in verve. It is silk which, if wetted, stiffens almost like paper.

How far these English losses will react upon American trade it is impossible to foresee. The deficiency in cotton and corn can be made good from this side, but it is doubtful if any marked advantage will accrue to American producers unless the war should involve other powers than Egypt and Great Britain.

R. B. Forbes of Milton has a mocking bird hanging under the piazza, and near it recently was a robin's nest with young birds. The robins, while bringing worms to their brood, were twice seen to stop, alight on the cage of the prisoner and drop worms into his mouth.

A canary belonging to a lady in Dubuque, on being given its liberty in a room one day, flew to the mantel, whereon was a mirror. Thinking he had found a mate, he went back to the cage and brought a seed to offer to the stranger. Getting no satisfactory reply, he poured forth his sweetest notes pausing now and then to watch the effect. Finally he went back to his perch, and with his head hanging, remained silent the rest of the day.

Moistened meal in saucers was placed in the chicken yard of Charles White of New Castle N. H. It there attracted great quantities of flies. An observant toad now daily climbs into the saucers, rolls over and over until he is covered with meal, and then awaits developments. The flies, enticed by the meal, soon swarm around the scheming batrachian, and whenever one passes within two inches or so of his nose, his tongue darts out, and the fly disappears.

At a village near Lyons a bear and its leader were admitted at an inn, the bear being placed in a pigsty. In the pen was a very fat porker that the owner intended killing on the morrow. Cries for help in the night revealed the fact that the bear was in close communion with a thief, who had entered the sty with the intention of stealing the pig. The bear held his prisoner firmly until his master told him to let go, and he was handed over to the police.

In an alleyway behind a store in New Orleans a cat planned to catch a pigeon picking up grain. As Puss wriggled up within distance to spring, the bird flew ten feet away and resumed his meal. The cat repeated the attempt with the same result several times, until the end of the alleyway was reached. She now approached her intended victim with even more than usual caution. But the seemingly careless bird knew his business, and picked away as though nothing was the matter. This time Puss succeeded in making her spring, and landed just where she intended to. But the pigeon wasn't there. He went into the air at exactly the right moment, and, flying over the cat's head, alighted on the very spot from which she had just sprung. The cat, with a dejected look, disappeared through a broken cellar window, leaving Mr. Pigeon to finish his dinner.

A Power in the House of Parliament.

Conspicuous among the influential men of the Dominion is Mr. J. H. Metcalf, Member of Parliament from the city of Kingston. Commencing life as a school teacher, he has steadfastly worked his way upward to the honored position in business and politics he now holds. Coming to a personal matter we would mention that Mr. Metcalf was formerly subject to extreme soreness of the chest, for which, as he himself says "I could find no remedy but St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy." In the following letter Mr. Metcalf gives evidence of his appreciation. "I take great pleasure in stating that I used St. Jacobs Oil for extreme soreness of the chest, and found it to be an exellent remedy. I would not be without it for ten times its selling price; as a family remedy it certainly has no equal."

The Canadian Mutual Aid Association.

Mutual protection has grown to be a necessity, and arguments are no longer needed to convince thinking persons of its wisdom and beneficence. The man who provides against uncertainties ceases to that extent to be at their mercy. It should be the pride and pleasure of every husband and father to go as far as his means will permit in providing for his family in the event of his death. While you are in health and prosperity prepare for adversities. THE CANADIAN MUTUAL AID ASSOCIATION offers a means, with very little expense, of making provision for loved ones, in case you can no longer extend to them your protecting care. PERILS OF THE DEEP.

"During my trip down the River Tagus, in Spain," said Captain Boyton to a representative of this journal in a recent conversation by the sea shore, "I had to 'shoot' 105 waterfalls, the largest being about eighty-five feet, and innumerable rapids. Crossing the Straits of Messina, I had three ribs broken in a fight with sharks; and coming down the Somane, a river in France, I received a charge of shot from an excited and startled huntsman. Although this was not very pleasant and might be termed dangerous, I fear nothing more on my trip than intense cold; for, as long as my limbs are free and easy and not cramped or benumbed I am all right. Of late I carry a stock of ST. JACOBS OIL in my little boat—[The Captain calls it "Baby Mine," and has stored therein signal rockets, thermometer, compass, provisions, etc.]—and I have but little trouble. Before starting out I rub myself thoroughly with the article, and its action upon the muscles is wonderful. From constant exposure I am somewhat subject to rheumatic pains, and nothing would ever benefit me until I got hold of this Great German Remedy. Why, on my travels I have met people who had been suffering with rheumatism for years; by my advice they used the Oil and it cured them. I would sooner do without food for days than be without this remedy for one hour. In fact I would not attempt a trip without it." The Captain became very enthusiastic on the subject of ST. JACOBS OIL, and when we left him he was still citing instances of the curative qualities of the Great German Remedy to a party around him.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM
Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

WINGHAM, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone it properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure
ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on recept of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Mr. Mark Madden formerly of this township, but now a clerk in E. B. Nugent's Louisville Ky, left here to return to his place of business on Thursday 24th, after spending the previous ten days very pleasantly among his old school mates, and friends. It is very frequently remarked that Osprey has no attractions but am happy to find a proof to the contrary as he remarked to me when leaving that he never turned his back on his native place reluctantly as this time and if Osprey would only mantain him in his business he would rather stay than return to Kentucky, he tells some very ancient and amusing stories of the old Kentucky home. His friends generally are very sorry that he could not stay longer among them. I think I am safely add that all the neighbors wish him a very pleasant trip and every success in his business life.

The funerals of the four young men, drowned in Brewester's Lake, took place on Friday, the 13th inst. They were all very largely attended, especially that of William Francis Wisdom, who was very highly esteemed by all who had pleasure of knowning him. The deceased was the only son of Mr. J. Wisdom con 3 Osprey. He was a young man of rare moral qualities, of more than average abilities. and of great promise. His friends and acquaintance fully demonstrated their affectionate regard to his memory, not only by following his remains to their last resting place—in the Presbyterian cemetery at Maxwell—in greater numbers than was ever seen in this part of the country, but by the expression of sympathy extended from all quarters to his breaved parents and only sister.

On sabbath the funeral sermon was preached in the Maxwell Presbyterian church by the minister of the congregation. The attendence was so large that after all available space inside the church was occupied, large numbers remained outside.

Francis Winters, whose gallant effort to save the lives of his companions will always be spoken of in terms of the highest praises, has been very ill for some time after this terrible accident, but fully recovered.

This was crowded out last week.

A man at Des Moines kissed his hired girl by mistake, and had to pay $800 to settle it. When he discovered what he had done he should have sworn he did it on purpose, and she'd have been tickled to death and worked to keep his wife from finding it out.

A kiss on the forehead means reverence, but there's no fun in it worth mentioning.

Making Love in the Choir.

From Puck.

She sat on the steps of the organ aloft
Just after the second hymn;
And through nave and choir to the cool gray spire
The sound rose faint and dim,
As they settled themselves in the church below
For the sermon that followed next.
And I seated myself at the alto's side
As the parson took his text.

I marked the tender flush of her cheek,
And the gleam of her golden hair,
The snowy kerchief 'round her neck,
And her throat all white and bare;
A throat so white that indeed it might
An anchorite entice;
And I faintly heard the parson's word
As he preached of Paradise.

My arm stole gently around her waist
Until our fingers met;
And a flitting blush made the tender flush
Of her cheek grow deeper yet.
Snowy and fair the hand beneath,
And brown the palm above,
And the brown closed softly over the white
As the parson spoke of love.

Ah, who is wise, when deep blue eyes
Meet his and look coyly down?
Who would but drink, nor care to think
Of envy's jealous frown?
'Twas but to bend till I felt her breath
Grow warm on my cheek, and then
My lips just softly touched her own
As the parson said Amen.

THE FISHERWOMAN OF HONFLEUR.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH COMMUNE.

CHAPTER I.

There was an unusual stir and bustle in the old-fashioned and generally dull town of Honfleur, opposite the port of Havre, in France. The old weather-worn, worm-eaten, wooden wharfs and jetties were thronged with fisherwomen and girls, all clad in their gala attire, whose number increased as they were joined by fresh arrivals from the neighbouring sea-coast, many having come from distant villages and hamlets. There was such eager, lively, and continuous chattering, that a stranger might have imagined there had occurred a second confusion of tongues—confined on this occasion to the gentler sex. The eyes of all present were directed seawards, and from time to time, some one would mount one of the wooden piles to which small vessels that frequented the harbour were moored, and pointing to a speck on the water, visible in the far distance, would cry: "Ils viennent! Ils viennent! Je les vois!' (They come! They come! I see them!) And for a few moments the clamour of voices would be hushed, only to break forth again with expressions of disappointment; for these fisherwomen and girls had assembled to greet the return of husbands, brothers, sons, and lovers who had long been absent, engaged in the cod-fishery in the stormy North Sea.

For many weeks past, the weather had been tempestuous; and those who had friends and relations at sea—and these comprised every inhabitant of the town and the neighbouring sea-coast—had passed many a sleepless night, listening to the fierce gusts of wind that swept around their humble and often exposed dwellings; or had started out of their troubled slumber to breathe a short but earnest prayer for the safety of the absent ones; for there had come from time to time sad stories of fishing-vessels that had foundered at sea with all hands; and all who heard these dismal stories dreaded lest the lost vessels might be those which had sailed a few months before with their dearest relations and friends on board.

On the previous night, however, a steam-packet had arrived at Honfleur, and her captain had repeated the glad tidings that he had that day passed the homeward-bound Honfleur fishing-fleet off Dieppe, all safe, and that, as the wind was favourable, the vessels might be expected to arrive in port next morning. Hence the vast and eager concourse of fisherwomen from the town and the adjacent coast.

At length there was a general hush. A speck that to a landsmen would have appeared like a bird hovering over the water, was discerned in the far distance; then another, and yet another became visible. There was no longer any doubt that the fleet was approaching. Nearer and nearer the vessels drew; the cut of their sails could be discerned; then their low black hulls appeared, and the experienced eyes of the fisherwomen recognised the vessels in which their husbands, lovers, and sons had sailed. The women counted the approaching luggars. Not one vessel of the little fleet was missing. But it yet remained to be seen whether all the crews had returned safe and well; and the hearts of the anxious watchers beat quickly, with hopes, doubts, and fears commingled.

Another weary hour passed away, and the vessels were off the port. Then arose from them a cheer which brought relief to the anxious women. Well they knew its meaning. It announced that all who had sailed with the fleet had returned safe and well. The cheer was answered with a general shrill cry of joy. The vessels entered the harbour and ranged up alongside of the wharf; and amidst cries of welcome, bursts of hysteric laughter, and tears of joy and gladness, the hardy, weather-beaten fishermen leaped on shore to greet their impatient loved ones. It was a strange yet pleasing sight to see these stalwart, weather-browned, whiskered and bearded seamen, clad in their coarse pilot jackets, tarry petticoat-trousers, heavy sea-boots, and oilskin sou'-wester caps—their garments still damp, and glistening with the spray which had fallen in showers over the vessels' decks, even to the moment when they entered the sheltered harbour—clasped in the loving embraces of the women and girls the instant their feet touched the wharf. The elder women, though brown and wrinkled, were yet robust and healthy; the young women and girls fresh and comely, with pleasant pretty faces, fair complexions, blue eyes, and glossy brown hair. All alike, old and young, were neatly and smartly attired in their picturesque fisherwomen's costume, with high, wide-frilled caps, white as snow, short, full petticoats, creaseless blue or gray stockings, and neatly buckled shoes, which set off their well-formed lower limbs to great advantage; while many of them wore large earrings of real gold, handed down as heirlooms from grandmothers and great-grandmothers.

Amongst the first to leave their craft was a tall, handsome, young man, with laughing blue eyes, and curly, dark-brown hair, who leaped to the wharf into the extended arms of a pretty girl, apparently not more than eighteen years of age, who, as she embraced her lover, seemed perfectly regardless of the surrounding crowd.

"Welcome—welcome home, my Antoine!" cried the girl as she kissed her lover's whiskered cheek. "Ah, how I have prayed and sighed for thy return! The storms have been so severe; and we heard such bad news that my heart was troubled. But the blessed Madonna hearkened to my prayers, and again I behold thee safe and well. The sight repays me for all my sufferings."

The youthful pair released each other, and forcing a passage through the thick of the crowd, strolled away side by side in the direction of their native village, each with an arm twined round the other's waist. There was silence for a few minutes. Both were happy with their own thoughts.

Madeleine at length broke the silence. "Thou hast not told me about thy voyage, Antoine. Has it been successful."

"Successful as I could desire, my Madeleine," replied the young man. "If the gales have blown somewhat fiercely, it is what we fishermen must look for; and we care little for the weather if other things favor us. The good St. Antoine [St. Antoine is regarded by the French fishermen as their patron saint] has watched over us, and guided our vessel safe home.—And now, hearken, Madeleine! Tell me, dearest, is it not time that we possessed a luggar of our own?" glancing over his shoulder towards the vessel he had just quitted, whose mast could be seen amidst those of the other craft in the port. "Will not the gains of this voyage make up the necessary amount, Madeleine?"

It is customary among the fishermen of the northern and western coast of France, on their betrothal—which usually takes place at an early age—to some young maiden of their class, to place the wages at the end of each voyage in the hands of their fiancees, for safe keeping, reserving only what is sufficient for their necessary expenditure, and for the renewal of their outfits before they sail again, with a trifle beyond this amount, to pay for their small indulgences and harmless recreations. The young women having attended school when children, are generally possessed of some little education; while the boys go to sea with their relatives or friends as soon as they are of the slightest service on shipboard. Thus few among the latter know how to read or write. It is customary also with the young woman, after betrothal, to stipulate with their lover, that, previous to their marriage, some object for their mutual benefit shall be attained, such as the purchase of a fishing-luggar, or a share in such a vessel, or at least the means of purchasing the needful furniture, &c., for a humble household—according to their position.

Antoine and Madeleine belonged to what may be termed the superior class of fisher-folk. Both had been left orphans at an early age, and each had inherited a few thousand francs on the death of their parents. This money had been carefully set aside—but not in a bank. The French fisher-folk, in the days of which we write, had no faith in banks, and preferred to keep their savings where they might be secure, and ready to hand when required. To these joint bequests, Antoine's wages, and Madeleine's earnings from knitting and fancy-netting in her leisure hours, had been added from time to time, until, when Antoine sailed on his last voyage, but a small addition to the savings already accumulated was needed for the accomplishment of the desired object.

Madeleine—although she had been firm in her resolve not to wed her lover until the object of their mutual ambition was secured—was no coquette. "It is now three years ago, my Antoine," she replied to her lover's question, "since we betrothed ourselves to each other in the chapel of Our Lady of Lorette. I was then but sixteen, you were nineteen years of age. I shall be twenty years old on my next birthday, three weeks hence. We have more than sufficient, Antoine, for the purchase of a luggar with everything on board complete, without counting thy profits on this last voyage. My poor old uncle, Pierre le Blanc, died soon after you sailed the last time, and left me a handsome legacy. The profits of your last voyage will be so much extra, which we can lay by, or expend on furniture and such other things as may be necessary. Perhaps, Antoine, if thou wilt, my approaching birthday may be our wedding-day?"

It is needless to state that the young fisherman was more than willing that the wedding should take place at the time mentioned by his fiancee. In due course the bans were published in the little village church, and on the anniversary of her birthday, Madeleine Letour and Antoine Duroc were united.

A new fishing-luggar, with masts and spars and sails and rigging all complete, was purchased; and Antoine remained at home for some months after his marriage, leisurely preparing his vessel for sea, but chiefly passing his time with his young wife. Occasionally, with the object of testing the qualities of the new vessel, which was called The Madeleine, the young fellow sailed for a day's fishing along the coast; but, for the first time since he was old enough to go to sea, the Honfleur fleet of luggars sailed for the far distant cod-fishery without him.

It has been hinted that when the meeting took place between the returned fishermen and their wives, sisters, and sweethearts, all present on the occasion were too full of joy to care to conceal their happiness. There was, nevertheless, one individual present who had no share in the general feeling of gladness, whose heart was, on the contrary, full of surpressed passion, hatred, and jealousy. This individual, however, was not a member of the fisher community. He was one Lucien Pierrot, the son of a rich buorgeois of Paris, who owned considerable property in Honfleur and its vicinity. Lucien was accustomed frequently to visit the town to receive the rents from his father's tenants, and on other matters of business; for though he was a gambler and spendthrift, and addicted to many other vices, he was an only son, and his father, though often deceived, continued to place confidence in him. During one of these visits, at the date of the annual Honfleur fair, Lucien met with Madeleine—who was visiting the fair with a party of female friends—and was struck with the grace and beauty of the fisher-girl. He sought to introduce himself to her by offering her trifling presents as "fairings;" but the fisher-folk are an exclusive class, who hold themselves aloof from strangers. Madeleine declined, bashfully, yet decidedly, to accept the proffered gifts, and strove to avoid the young man's attentions. In nowise disconcerted, however, Lucien, taking advantage of the license allowed at fair-time, attached himself to the party, in the hope of inducing Madeleine to look more favourably upon him, by ingratiating himself with her companions. All his gallantry was, however, thrown away. The young women took no heed of him; and separated for their respective abodes without bestowing one parting word or glance upon him.

Unaccustomed to be thus cavalierly treated by young women whom he honoured with his attentions, Lucien had been in the habit of using every effort to win Madeleine's affections. He dared not visit her at home in the village, for he was well aware of the pride and independence of the fisher-folk, who would stand on little ceremony with him if it became known to them that he was intruding his attentions upon one of their young people. But he contrived to meet her whenever she strolled beyond the village; and when, twice a week, she attended the market at Honfluer, he was always present, and was a frequent and liberal purchaser of the fancy wares she offered for sale. Always civil, and even polite in his manner towards her, he gave her no opportunity to complain of his conduct to her friends; yet, though she strove in every way to make it apparent to him that his presence was disagreeable to her, she was unable to shake him off. At length he grew more bold, and ventured to speak of his affection for her, and entreated her to accompany him to Paris, promising to make her his wife immediately on their arrival in that city. But he met with such a withering repulse, that he instantly regretted his temerity. The look of anger and scorn in the eyes of the young girl and the tone of her voice, told plainly that she was in earnest; and from that time, he had ceased his open persecutions. But he nevertheless resolved to gain his end by some other means. He had discovered that Madeleine was betrothed to a young fisherman; and though Antoine was personally unknown to him, Lucien conceived a mortal hatred for him, and vowed that if he failed in his object, he would find some way of revenging himself both on the young girl and her lover.

On the day when the fleet arrived in port, and the fisherwomen and girls were assembled on the wharfs, as already described, to greet their long absent husbands and lovers, Lucien also might hight have been seen skulking in the background, wrapped in a cloak, drawn up so as to conceal his features, eagerly watching the fishermen as they leaped on shore. He saw Madeleine on the wharf; and then he saw a handsome young fisherman, who, the moment he landed, was clasped in the young girl's embrace. He ground his teeth with impotent rage, and in his eagerness to get a good view of Antoine, stepped a few paces forward, and allowed the cape of his cloak to fall back.

As Antoine and Madeleine were forcing a passage through the crowd, Madeleine caught a momentary glimpse of her detested persecutor. The young girl shuddered involuntarily; and Antoine tenderly inquired whether she felt cold. Madeleine was almost inclined to acquaint her lover with the cause of her alarm; but she dreaded the immediate consequences of such a disclosure, and feeling secure in her lover's protection, she deemed it advisible to keep her secret. "Now that Antoine has returned, and our marriage will soon take place," she thought, "that bad man will see that it will be useless to trouble me any longer, and will no doubt return to Paris."

Lucien continued to follow the young couple at a distance, midway to the village. Had he dared, he would have interposed himself between the lovers; but Lucien was naturally a coward; he knew that the stalwart young fisherman would have crushed him as easily as he could have flung a child from him, and he was forced to content himself with brooding over plans of vengeance. He could do nothing just now; but he thought it probable that after her lover had gone to sea, Madeleine would be more amenable to his advances and persuasions. And if such were not the case, he believed in his power to find some means of wrecking his vengeance upon both. So he turned aside from following them further that day, and left the happy and youthful couple to the enjoyment of each other's society.

Brave Boys at Niagara.

Last week a party of Germans stopping at the Frontier House, Suspension Bridge, among whom was Morits Witmer, a wealthy brewer from Sexton, Germany, visited the "Maid of the Mist" landing for the purpose of taking a bath. At this point, it will be remembered, the current is very rapid, and to one not accustomed to the place it is perilous to venture in. Mr. Witmer, knowing nothing of the water's depth, or the swiftness of the current, got out too far, and would have been carried down the rapids but for the timely assistance rendered by two lads named Henry and William Rodgers, sons of Mr. Henry Rodgers of the Canadian Customs House at Clifton, who arrived upon the scene as the man was sinking for the third time; the boys, seeing the man in danger, at once jumped into the water, and, after a hard struggle, succeeded in rescuing him. William was the first to reach the drowning man, who grasped him by the neck with a death grip and drew him under. Henry had by this time reached the scene, and, diving, managed to release the drowning man's hold of his brother, after which the boys succeeded in getting him ashore, the whole party being thoroughly exhausted. Witnesses of the affair says it was one of the most gallant rescues ever performed on the Niagara River.

An account is given in English journals of the performance of a locomotive on the Great Northern Railroad, which recently carried the Duke of Edinburgh from Leeds to London, 186¾ miles, in three hours, or at the rate of sixty-two miles per hour. This speed has frequently been equalled, and sometimes passed for short distances, but is remarkable as the average rate for such a long journey. The engine had driving wheels eight feet in diameter, or two feet larger than the wheels of American engines. To accomplish the trip in the time given, the wheel must have made 219 revolutions per minute, or more than 39,000 in three hours.

TOPICS FOR WOMEN.

WHEN TO PROPOSE.

A woman must have satisfied her hunger twice before she is ready to regard love-making with any satisfaction. Before breakfast her system is chilled and her blood dispersed through her body. After breakfast it concentrates itself in the digestive functions, and it is not until after lunch that she is prepared to abandon business activity for the realization of the ideal. Even then a proposition is unsafe, unless you are able to detect the instant when digestion terminates and discontent supervenes. Students of the fair sex agree that at this momont the conditions are favorable, but nothing is more difficult to others than medical men than to recognize the change, and if the discontent which seizes upon every woman at some time in the afternoon is permitted to assume sway before the declaration is made, the inevitable result is disappointment. There is but one way to overcome these conditions, and that is to project some excursion for the afternoon if business or other untoward obstacles make an afternoon declaration a necessity. But even this plan is open to serious objections. The average girl naturally shrinks from al fresco embraces, and sees an incongruity in daylight and love-making. Still, if the excursion be sufficiently romantic, she may excuse her preferences, for as there is no reason whatever in the love of a woman, there is no selfishness, and she is consequently prepared to make sacrifices. Marvellous successes have been attained at such time, though many a pleasant drive-way has been strewn with pitiful failures, and the waves of thousands of lovely lakes show the wreck of full many a hope shining through.

COMFORTS.

Sooner or later, friends, the time for folded hands will come to us all. Whether or not we cease from hurry and worry now, we shall one day shut our eyes upon it, and lie still untroubled by the stir and fret of things about us. Why not take comfort as we go?

You, proud mother of a beautiful, active boy, of what use will it be to you to remember how exquisitely fine was his raiment, how daintily spread his bed, and how profuse his costly toys? What the child needs is mothering brooding, tender resting on your heart; and he needs it every step of the way from babyhood to manhood. The comfort of your opportunities. Never mind though the dress be coarse, and the food plain, and the playthings few, but answer the questions, tell the stories, spare the half hour at bed time, and be merry and gay, confidential and sympathetic with your boy.

And you, whose graceful young daughter is just blushing out into the bloom and freshness of a wondrously fair womanliness, do not be so occupied with your ambition for her advancement in life that you let her ways and your own fall apart. Why are her friends, her interests, and her engagements so wholly distinct from yours? Why does she visit here and there and receive visitors from this and that home, and you scarcely know the people by sight? You are losing precious hours, and the comfort you ought to take is flying fast away on those wings of time that are never overtaken.

The Cost of Dead Relatives in China.

In an entertaining, illustrated article in the September Century on "Ningpo and the Buddhist Temples," Miss Constance F. Gordon Cumming describes as follows the great expense to which the living are put to in China on account of the dead:

Great indeed are the expenses entailed on the living by the dead. In no land can the loss of a kinsman be more seriously felt. To begin with, there are heavy funeral expenses. The body must be dressed in fine new clothes, and another good suit must be burnt, as also the boots and shoes, most of his wardrobe, his bed and bedding, and the things most essential to his comfort when living, for he is supposed to require all these in the unseen world; and though paper representations are useful later, the real articles are needed for the original outfit. Then a handsome coffin is essential, and the priests must be largely paid for funeral services at the house of the deceased, and again for their services in ascertaining the lucky day for burial—while a professor of fung shui must also be paid, to choose the exact spot where they may safely prepare the grave so that the dead may be shielded from the evil influences which proceed from the north, and encompassed by all the good which breathes from the south. From the 10th to the 17th day after death, the priest, whether Taoist or Buddhist, hold services in the house, to protect the living from the inroads of hosts of spirits who are supposed to crowd in, in the wake of their new friend, and as all the relatives and friends of the family must be entertained as well as the priests, this is another heavy item of expense. In short, many families are often permanently impoverished by the drain to which they are thus subjected, and which, in the form of masses, for the departed and offerings at his grave or before his tablet, are certain to recur again and again. To omit them would be to incur the anger of the spiteful dead, who are now in a position to avenge themselves on the living, by inflicting all manner of sickness and suffering. Besides, if the priests know that there is any possibility of extaacting money from a family by playing on their feelings, they pretend to have had revelations from the spirit world, showing the unfortunate dead to be tortured in purgatory, and that the only means by which he can be extricated is by a fresh course of costly services in the house. The price to be paid for these is fixed at the highest sum which they judge it possible to extract—say a thousand dollars, and though the family may remonstrate and endeavor to make a better bargain, it generally ends in their raising every possible coin, and even selling their jewels to procure the necessary sum which shall free their dead from suffering, and also secure his protection and good-will. The sums thus expended in connection with the worship of the dead are almost incredible. I heard a calculation once made by one well entitled to know what he spoke of, to the effect that fully thirty million dollars are anually expended in China at the three great festivals in honor of the dead; while, in addition to the above, by calculating the average expenditure of each family at a dollar and a half a year, he computed that fully a hundred and fifty million dollars are annually spent in quieting the spirits.

THE SULTAN'S SERAGLIO.

[H]ow the Great Establishment on the Bosphorous is Conducted.

The Sultan's Seraglio, whose buildings [s]tretch to the length of a mile and a half, [w]ithin a mile from Therapia, contains more [th]an 3,000 inmates, and is a city in itself. [H]ere the Government of the empire is carried [o]n chiefly by women and children. The [v]izieres and ministers are but the servants [o]f these secluded creatures, and although at [t]imes a statesman, supported by a strong [p]alace clique, may wield real power, he sel[d]om does so for long, nor is his power very [g]reat. From the moment when he enters [o]ffice he is secretly assailed by a host of [e]nemies whom he does not see, and whom [h]e cannot disarm or propitiate. A Turkish [M]inister who is advised to begin reforms [m]ay promise all that an ambassador de[m]ands, but he well knows that any innova[t]ion he atttempted would disurb vested [i]nterests which might happen to be defend[e]d by some Circassian favorite of the Sul[t]an's, or by some insolent baltadji, the [c]onfidential servant for the time being of the Sultana Valide. As for the Sultan, [a]s a rule he is as much at their mercy as his Ministers. A puppet in the hands of women, he never knows exactly who rules him, but is obliged, for peace's sake, to do as his mother, sister, kadines or favorites order. More than one Sultan, weary to death of Seraglio intrigues, would have been glad to make a clean sweep of his female court, but any step in this direction would have led to conspiracy and deposition.

The loyalty of the people, which is great toward the office of the Padishah, is almost null as regards the individual who holds the office, so that, provided that there be a Sultan, the people care little who he is, nor would they be disposed to take up arms for any Padishah who had been deposed by a palace plot.

The Seraglios—for there are two, the new one, where the court of the reigning Sultan resides, and the old one to which the favorites of departed Sultans are relegated—harbour between them some 4,000 persons, and are a source of ruinous expense to the treasury. Not only are the allowances of the sultans, kadines, ikbals (favorites), and guieuzdes (aspirant favorites) large, but the ways of the palace are extravagant. Each of the imperial ladies has her diara, or retinue of companions, male and female servants; and all these people scatter gold about without counting whenever they have a whim to satisfy.

Sultans do not contract regular marriages, and the reigning lady at the Seraglio is never the Sultan's wife, but his mother. She bears the title of Sultana Valide, and all the inmates of the Seraglio owe her servile obedience. Her household consists of about 200 servants and guards. Next to her in rank comes the hasnadar ousta, or mistress of the treasury, who is generally a shrewd old women, promoted from the ranks of domesticity for her talents in gossip and housekeeping. If the Sultana Valide dies the basnader succeeds her as queen of the Seraglio; and this arrangement sometimes lead to strange consequences.

Under Abdul Medjid the palace was ruled for years by a harsnader who had been a washerwoman, and whose chief adviser was a churlish baltadji (hewer of wood) who could not read, but who had the power of dimissing viziers. It was, in fact, the baltadji who ruled Turkey.

After the hasnader comes the Sultan's semi-lawful wives and favorites in the following order: First, the four kadines, who rank as spouses, until his Majesty divorces them and gives them in marriage to some pasha, which he does pretty often; then the ikbals or favorites, to the number of five or six, and then the aspirant favorites, whose number is unlimited.

A girl in the Seraglio, even if she be a simple cavedji or coffee bearer, becomes a guieuzdes or aspirant favorite from the mere fact of the Sultan's making a complimentary remark on her. The word is derived from guienz, eye, and it means a girl who has attracted the master's glance. If, for instance, his Majesty, while visiting one of his relatives, remarks carelessly, "What a pretty girl that is who brought in the coffee," the damsel is at once and without further parley promoted to the rank of guieuzdi, which gives her a suite of apartments, a daira and a claim on the imperial exchequer the remainder of her life, or until such time as the Sultan finds her a husband.

As every one who marries from the Seraglio takes with her her clothes, jewels, furniture, servants, carriage and a lump sum in money, which often amounts to thousands of dollars, it may be imagined how the civil list is mulcted when there are many aspirant favorites. After the Sultan's favorites precedency is given to the kadines—effendis, mother of some prince or princess; then to the Sultanas, unmarried princesses of the blood, and finally, to the foster sisters of the sultans, or princes and princesses of the blood. Foster parents and their children are always regarded as permanent members of a Turk's household, and during several years Nahir Hanoun, Abdul Medjid's foster sister, held a paramount influence in his household.

Coming now to the male members of the Seraglio, we find in addition to the necessary staff of chamberlains, secretaries, eunuchs, scullions and cooks, a corps of 200 pages and musicians, and a very army of barbers shampooners, tasters of the Sultan's food, athletes, buffoons, ram fighters, astrologers and grooms. The ram fighters were appointed to amuse Abdul Aziz, but they have been maintained by the present Sultan because it is almost impossible to dismiss any one who has once held office in any palace without giving him a pension. The same may be said of the astrologers, whose functions have become a sinecure, though they are occasionally summoned into the haremlik to entertain the ladies by fortune telling. As for the buffoons and dwarfs, they have always been numerous, for ladies living in seclusion must be made to laugh when time hangs heavy on their hands and when the music and jigging of the dancing girls begin to pall. These dancing girls form a corps 300 strong, and as they are splendidly dressed and richly fed, they cost more to keep than a cavalry regiment. I need not enumerate the staff of servants and officials required for the stables (which contain 500 horses), for the kitchen the baths and gardens, nor yet the staff of court priests, but enough has been said, perhaps, to warrant the inference that the Sultan's court is at once the costliest and laziest in the world.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HOW AMERICANS EAT.

An Englishman Criticises the Way They Eat in the Far West.

San Francisco Letter in the New York World.

It was in the Ogden refreshment-room, waiting for the train for San Francisco, that I saw a performance which filled me with astonishment and dismay. It was a man eating his dinner. And let me here remark, with all possible courtesy, that the American is the most reprehensible eater I have ever seen. In the first place, the knives are purposely made blunt—the back and the front of the blade being often of the same "sharpness"—to enable him to eat gravy with it. The result is that the fork (which ought to be used simply to hold the meat steady on the plate while being cut with the knife) has to be used with great force to wrench off fragments of food. The object of the two instruments is thus materially abused, for he holds the meat down with the knife and tears it to pieces with his fork! Now, reader, don't say no. For I have been carefully studying Americans at their food (all over the West at any rate), and what I say is strictly correct. This abuse of knife and fork, then, necessitates an extraordinary amount of elbow room, for in forcing apart a tough slice of beef the elbows have to stick out as square as possible, and the consequence is, as the proprietor of a hotel told me, only four Americans can eat in a space in which six Englishmen will dine comfortably. The latter when feeding keep their elbows to their sides; the former square them out on the line of the shoulders and at right angles to their sides. The American orders a dozen "portions" of as many eatables, and the whole of his meal, after the filthy fashion of the "eating-houses" at which travellers are fed, is put before him at once. To eat the dozen or so different things he has ordered he has only one knife and fork and one teaspoon. Bending over the table he sticks his fork into a pickled gherkin, and while munching this casts one rapid, hawk-like glance over the spread viands, and then proceeds to eat. Mehercule! what a sight it is! He dabs his knife into the gravy of the steak and picks up with his fork a piece of bacon. While the one is going up to his mouth the other is reaching out for something else. He never apparently chews his food, but dabs and pecks at the dishes one after the other with a rapidity which merely as a juggling trick might be performed in London to crowded houses every day, and an impartiality that, considered as dining, is as savage as any meal of Red Indians or of Basutos. Dab-bab, peck-peck, grunt, growl, and snort! The spoon strikes in every now and then, and a quick, sucking-up noise announces the disappearance of a mouthful of huckleberries on the top of a piece of bacon, or a spoonful of custard pie on the heels of a radish. It is perfectly prodigious. It defies coherent description. But how on earth does he swallow it? Every now and then he shuts his eyes and strains his throat. This I suppose is when he swallows, for I have seen children getting rid of cake with the same sort of spasm. Yet the rapidity with which he shovels in his food is a wonder to me, seeing that he has got no "pouch" like the monkey or the pelican. Does he keep his miscellaneous food in a "crop" like a pigeon, or a preliminary stomach like a cow, and "chew the cud" afterwards at his leisure? I confess I am beaten by it. The mixture of his food, if it pleases him, does not annoy me, for if a man likes to eat mouthsful of huckleberries, bacon, apple pie, pickled mackerel, peas, mutton, gherkins, oysters, radishes, tomatoes, custard and poached eggs (this is a bona fide meal, copied from my note-book on the spot) in indiscriminate confusion, it has nothing to do with me.

The Richest Tin Mine in the World.

From the London Field.

To the westward of the Surrey Hills, in Tasmania, in the county of Russell, and at the distance of a hundred miles from Launceston, lies Mount Bischoff, and here a few adventurers found tin in 1872. A company was formed and workings were commenced. An eminent minerologist reported that the mountain was almost a mass of tin, the ore yielding from 70 to 80 per cent. of pure metal. Large smelting works were erected at Launceston, and in the year 1876 a thousand tons of tin were raised. Twenty-five shillings only have been paid up on each share, but the present market price is from £60 to £69, the company during the last four years having paid a dividend every two months of 10 shillings per share. A fortunate gentleman in Hobart, who expended £875 in the purchase of 760 shares in 1873, now rejoices in the receipt of £2,100 a year as the income of his investment.

Some scientific journals propose that men of science should be called "scientiates," and not "scientists," and that instead of using the phrase "scientific studies" we should rather employ "sciential studies." No doubt these changes would harmonize our expressions very closely with the Italian scienziati and scienziali, but it is exceedingly questionable whether the adoption of these new words would add much to precision of statement, when the words now in use have very definite meanings attached to them.

ECHOES OF OLD WORLD NEWS.

Of traces of the Saxon ancestors of the English race that are still to be found in various parts of Germany few instances that were not vague have been made public, but Dr. Brandet, of Gottingen, has recently found a particular district where distinct remains of these Saxons now exist. The district is near the old Prussian fortress of Minden. He found in use there a curious lot of English words, among which was "Yes" instead of "Ja" or "Jo."

Health statistics of the English garrisons in Cyprus are said to show a great improvement, especially in the case of the Royal Engineers who form the only part of the garrison that has been stationed on the island, without interruption for two years. Last year the death-rate for the entire force, numbering an average of 443 men, was about 2½ per 1,000, as compared with nearly 19 per 1,000 in the previous year. How accurate and fair these figures are it would be hard to say, but unless there has been a very remarkable and real change in the healthfulness of the Island—one, in fact, that is almost incredible—there must be something wrong about them, for they go on to say that for the same period the mortality among British troops in Canada was a little over 6½, in Bermuda a little over 9¼, and in the West Indies a little over 8½ per 1,000.

From Victoria has been forwarded, by the Irishmen there resident, to the Lord Mayor of Dublin an address expressing strong and characteristic sympathy with the movement for home rule. The Irishmen of Ireland are described as suffering "under the hoof of a foreign despotism," and their condition is compared to that of the Israelites in their degrading servitude to the Egyptians. There are nine signatures to the address, and five of them are those of members of the Legislative Assembly. Attention was called to the address in the Assembly, and the Premier was asked if he intended to take any action. He replied that he proposed to take none. One of the signers then rose in his place and declared that if he had been guilty of treason or sedition he ought to be sent before a jury of his countrymen, and he was ready to go there. He merely desired for Ireland the same legislative independence that is possessed by Victoria.

Col. John C. Gawler, who died in England a few weeks ago, has been for a number of years the keeper of the Crown jewels, or, as he was known officially, the Keeper of the Regalia at the Tower of London. He was the son of that Col. Gawler who was at one time the Governor of South Australia, and he had seen long and notable service in the British army. His first military experience was had at an early age. The year 1851 found him with the Seventy-third Regiment in the Kafir war. He surved in that campaign until 1863, and came out of it with a medal and the brevet of Major. Five years latter he was gazetted a Lieutenans-Colonel in the army, and for services in the Indian mutiny he was awarded another medal. Still later he commanded as Brigadier a considerable force in the Himalayas against the Rajah of Sakkim, taking the Rajah's residence and forcing him to submit to the British terms of surrender. He subsequently penetrated to the Thibet frontier and "served in China and Ceylon."

During the past two or three months sad reports have been received in England from Iceland concerning the state of the food supply, and official reports more recently made to the Ministry at Copenhagen now confirm them. It appears from these that the winter of 1880-81 was one of unexampled severity, and that it was followed by a cold summer, so that the hay crop of 1881 was less than half an average crop, and in consequence, a much larger portion than usual of the sheep, and even many of the cows, had to be slaughtered in the autumn. People thus were too poor to buy the corn and maize imported for fodder, and their communications with the trading-stations had been cut off by the bad weather. Thousands of live stock died, the lambing failed, the milk both of ewes and cows has been lacking, and the usual autumn trade in sheep, tallow, and wool, on which the people depend for money wherewith to buy imported necessities, is likely to fail them now. The measles, which has not been in Iceland for 36 years, has attacked Reykjavik, and is spreading over the island. In London a fund has been started at various points to aid these sufferers.

Cheap Food.

At the present high price of meat food it is a satisfaction to know that the less meat one eats in hot weather the better off one will be. And it is no less satisfactory to know that a substitute as nutritious may be found among the cheapest articles of diet. Eggs at average prices are a cheaper food than meat. According to Dr. Edward Smith, in his treatise on "Food," an egg weighing an ounce and three-quarters contains 120 grains of carbon and 17 3-4 grains of nitrogen, or 15.25 per cent. of carbon and 2 per cent. of nitrogen. The value of one pound of eggs as food for sustaining the active forces of the body to, is to the value of one pound of lean beef as 1584 to 900. As a flesh producer one pound of eggs is about equal to one pound of beef. A writer in the Boston Journal of Chemistry estimates that a hen may be calculated to consume one bushel of corn yearly, and to lay ten dozen, or fifteen pounds, of eggs. This is equivalent to saying that three and one-tenth pounds of corn will produce, when fed to a hen, five-sixths of a pound of eggs; but five-sixths of a pound of pork requires about five pounds of corn for its production. Taking into account the nutriment in each, and the comparative prices of the two on an average, the pork is about three times as costly as egg, while it is certainly less healthful.

The largest sailing vessel afloat was launched at Belfast, Ireland, recently. She was built by Harland, Wolff & Co., and was named the Walter H. Wilson. Her measurement is 300 feet by 42½ feet by 25 feet. She will be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's. She is built of iron, has four masts, three of which are square rigged, and is capable of carrying 4,000 tons dead weight.

TARANTULAS FIGHTING.

The Remarkable Battle of Spiders that Lasted Six Hours.

Among other curiosities brought here were two huge Arizona tarantulas, both of which were full grown. One was of the brown, and the other of the black variety. The brown fellow was caged in a common cigar box, and the black one in a glass jar. As they could not be exhibited to advantage in contrivances of this kind, and as they were not very pleasant company to have running about loose, a box almost two feet square, with a glass top, was procured, on the bottom of which a layer of sand was spread to make the animals feel at home. The cover was then drawn, and the two spiders pitched into it from their separate cages.

No sooner did the one discover the other's presence than they rushed at each other as viciously as two panthers, and immediately closed in deadly embrace. They came together with a bound, and then twining their long, hairy legs about each other rolled over and over in the sand, biting each other savagely, and then tugging with all their might, as if endeavoring to crush each other by sheer muscular power. Incredible as it may seem, this sort of warfare was kept up for six hours, during most of which time it could not be seen that either was gaining the slightest advantage, as neither showed any sign of disposition to end the fight except by the death of his adversary. At last the black one succumbed and rolled over dead on the sand, while the victor immediately proceeded to reap the spoils of his long battle.

Seizing his vanquished enemy in his stout horns or pincers, or whatever contrivance he has for that purpose, he rapidly tore him limb from limb and coolly proceeded in cannibalistic style, to make a meal of him. In a very short time nothing was left except a little pile of legs and pieces of shell to mark the spot where one tarantula had fallen and another had dined.—Denver Tribune.

Alexandria as it Was.

We very quickly found our way to the bazaars, "to mingle with the strange and turbaned crowd," those marvelous throngs of picturesque life; new forms, animate and inanimate; new sounds, new human beings, new animals, mingled beauty and dirt, of which no description can convey the slightest idea—nothing but actual sight. The fruit market, full of things as yet unknown and untasted—the market for such game as is brought from Lake Mareotis, and treasures of every description brought here from every corner of the eastern world by those long strings of patient, heavy-laden camels; crockery, saddlery, gold and silver embroidery, the scarlet fez, the yellow slippers, (with turn-up toes, for the exclusive use of the faithful,) fire-arms, glittering swords and daggers, gorgeous raiment of needlework, from the coarsest stuff to the rarest brooches, of material and color alike rich and harmonious; jeweled pipes, spices, carved wood and ivory, sweetmeats, rich stuffs woven by patient hands, playthings—many stalls together dealing in the same article. For just as in London you expect to find bankers in Lombard-street, silk-weavers in Spitalfields, coach-builders in Long Acre, watch-makers in Clerkenwell, &c., so in the East each trade has its own bazaar—the silk-weavers, the copper-smiths, the saddlers, letter-writers, the dealers in Moorish, Turkish, Persian, or Algerian stuffs, each cluster together in their own corner. But the chief charm of these bazaars lies in the throng of human beings of all sorts and kinds; the almost bewildering medley of voices talking "every man his own tongue wherein he was born;" the perpetual motion, the intensity of colors, the vivid sunlight, the cool, deep shadows. It is curious to stand beside the dealer in fire-arms and watch the simple process of manufacture. The workman, sitting on his counter, holds a long wire between his toes, and, slowly winding it around the tin barrel produces a lethal weapon which would astonish Purdie or Lancaster. It is a fowling-piece which a British sportsman would regard with awe if required to fire it; nevertheless, it proves fatal to a vast number of snipe and quail, and rarely leads to any accident. Those yellow slippers, too, are worthy of notice. The orthodox bright yellow dye with which the leather is stained is obtained from the rinds of pomegranates. Every blue-robed woman whom you meet probably carries on her head a great flat basket of fruits and vegetables, her little marketing for the day; or else on the shoulder sits a quaint Eastern baby, and a group of bigger children clustered round her—little creatures whose large, calm eyes would be so beautiful were it not for flies and filth; but, alas! as some one suggested, "What is beauty without soap?" (and, indeed, soap seems a thing unknown in Egypt, or at least wonderfully precious, judging from the prices charged for washing!) As to those poor dark-eyed little ones, their mothers keep them filthy on purpose, lest any one passing should admire them, and so excite the envy of evil spirits. Moreover, they believe it strengthens the sight to paint the eyelids of even the youngest baby with khol, a mixture of soot and antimony, which is carefully applied with a silver bodkin. This certainly makes the eye look immensely large, but painfully unnatural. Then, the amount of ophthalmia is something frightful. It is due chiefly to the intense dryness of the atmosphere and the subtle, impalpable dust which forever floats in the air above the crowded city. Exceeding dirt also does its part, while the swarms of flies which cluster on the sores, and there revel undisturbed, are a sight to fill you with disgust. Of course, they carry infection to the next eye on which they settle, and so the loathsome disease spreads, and that with such frightful rapidity that sometimes the whole eye is reduced to a mere opaque pulp within 24 hours, even when the sufferer is otherwise in perfect health. The consequent amount of blindness is startling, and I believe the computation is that one man in six has lost the sight of either one or both eyes.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Always fashionable: The toothpick boot is going out of fashion, 'tis said. But the broad, easy-swinging boot worn by vigorous men of about fifty, with marriageable daughters, will never go out of fashion, young man, never. Keep out of its reach.

THURSDAY, SEP. 7.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAW AT MARKDALE.

At the close of the court held to adjudicate on the thirty-two village cases, a general conversation took place on the cases, the method of bringing them up before the court, and the irregularity which caused the dismissal of all the cases under the Health act. Messrs. Elliot and Struthers, magistrates who had decided the cases were present, also Wm. Brown, Esq., J. P. who said that had he issued the summons or adjudicated, the cases would not have come to the conclusion that they had. Mr. Brown admitted nevertheless that the decision was "quite right," still in the first place he would not have issued the summons without advising the plaintiff on the steps he was taking. This puts the magistrate in the position of counsel for the plaintiff, and judge of the case at one and the same time ! surely this is not at all a desirable state of things. The plaintiff has in no case any more right to an exposition of the law than has the defendant, if either are in ignorance of the law, let them abide the consequence. In the second place Mr. Brown said he would have fined every one of the defendants, giving them (what they already possessed) right to appeal, this would have been another undesirable feature in law administration, for the magistrate would be acting without the statutes as no statute provides for a fine in the cases as they were brought forward, in fact the magistrate, by fining the delinquents wouldbe law maker and law administrator. Mr. Brown said that none of the defendants would go to the expenses of appealing although he admitted that if they did appeal the original conviction would be quashed, or very heavy expenses incurred. A magistrate's duty is certainly not to be counsel for plaintiff, nor make a "moral law" and convert upon said moral law, in opposition to the statutes of the country. His duty is rather to administer the law as he finds it and this the justices of the peace who tried these cases have done, not rashly, but with considerable thought and even the advice of the county attorney.

We are sorry Mr. Brown thus expressed himself and trust that he was actuated by a desire solely to suppress and remove the abominations which have abounded in our village.

FORD'S MILL MARKDALE.

We are always pleased to notice any alterations or improvements which tend to the advancement of our village, either agriculturally, socially, financially, religiously, or from a purely business point of view. Perhaps the greatest improvement, which has been introduced into the village of late is the building of vastly improved machinery to convert grain into flour at Mr Ford's mill. Perhaps many of our readers' knowledge of a miller's business is confined entirely to the information contained in a scripture passage which informs us that two woman were grinding in a field when one was taken and the other was left, the process at that time being the simple one of passing the grain between two stones, one of which was turned by the hand. From that system of grinding to that now being carried on at Ford's mill, the leap is a great one, and without puzzling the reader with a list of incomprehensible terms we will endeavour to show our readers the benefit they may derive from improved mill machinery and appliances existing in our thriving town.

The first machine to be noticed is a wheat brushing, polishing, and finishing machine; this takes the wheat after it has left the smut machine, removes from it all remaining dust, and other impurities which heretofore have passed with the grain between the stones; many will say oh ! the grain is clean enough : So we thought till we saw a room in one corner of the mill covered some 6 inches deep with dust and dirt which is deposited here by the Machine, and this dirt comes off the wheat before it passes through the stones, hitherto a great part of this passed into the flour bag as flour, henceforth it will be left behind being unfit for human food. while we were in the mill some fall wheat was brought in to be ground, we compared a sample of it as it was brought in with a handful as it passed into the hopper and the difference was great indeed. Another introduction is a dust exhaust, which draws the moisture from the stones, hitherto the moisture which forms about the stones during the grinding process has passed into the flour, and formed into little pasty substances, now it is drawn from the stones by means of this exhaust and passes away.

A third machine is a bran duster.

A fourth new feature is a 8-reel bolt chest with double conveyers, Mr. Ford is now laying himself out not only for the manufacture of superior flour for the people of the district but also for a complete merchant trade, and to do this successfully this bolt chest has been introduced. This applies also to a new packing chest, capable of holding 80 barrels of flour, situated in or immediately above a new flour packing machine. This is an apparatus for packing flour for shipment either in barrels or bags, the flour as it enter the barrels is pressed down with an arrangement something like the screw of a steamship, packing the flour into the smallest possible compass. Beyond this Mr. Ford has also put in another run of stones together with turbine wheel, &c, to be used solely for chopping feed.

Before the introduction of these improvements, Mr. Fords' mill was second to none within many miles for the manufacture of flour, but now he is in a position not only to make a better class of flour for those who favour him with their gristing, but also to carry on a large shipping trade The farmers will have the benefit of the improvements on the grain turned into flour here, and at the same time Mr. Ford will be able to compete successfully with others in the manufacture of flour for foreign markets.

A leak in the mill dam which has baffled all endeavours to remedy for some years, has been overcome and thus increased power obtained.

The machinery is from Mr J. G. Grey, of Toronto, and is the best obtainable.

Mr E. P. Caye, of Thistletown has executed the millwright's work.

Messrs Moffat Bros. of our own town have constructed all the shafting, pulleys, fittings. &c. This has all been done by Messrs. Moffat in a highly satisfactory manner. Mr J. W. Ford is loud in his praises of the execution of the work done for him at our Markdale Foundry.

CHATSWORTH.

From our own Correspondent.

A young son of Mr Daniel Black, received a severe cut on thr head by being thrown off a young horse on which his father had placed him to see how he could ride.

Mr Heming, merchant, leaves here about the 15th to open grocery store at Meaford. Mr Wm. Ross, of Owen Sound, will start branch store at Mr Heming's old stand.

At a public meeting held here last Friday evening, it was decided to buy one of Dobbin's fire engines to cost about $125.

Whether John Charlton did or did not leave 63 cents of his school taxes unpaid in 1875, sure enough his lot of 50 acres was advertised for sale for taxes, unawares to him, in 1878, and 40 acres of it sold, the purchaser being the well-known McLellan, formerly of Durham, and who recently decamped from Toronto, leaving many creditors to sigh for him. McLellan mortgaged the property for $800, and the first that Charlton knows of it was the other day when he received notice from the loan company to give up possession peaceably, rather than be forcibly ejected. Mr Charlton claims that he holds receipt in full for school taxes 1775, and the collector for that year says he remembers distinctly having received them. There will doubtless be some trouble about it ; and here is proof how important a thing it is to take the local paper. and be interested in its contents.

A span of horses belonging to Mr. W. Ferguson, con. 6, Sullivan, ran away on Wednesday last, coming in contact with a grain cradle, cut itself so badly about the fetlock as to bleed to death in half-an-hour.

Rev. Jas. Cameron returned home from his trip to the Sault on Thursday last, after an absence of four weeks.

Mr A. Webster has sold his new brick grist and flour mill to Mr Robert McGowan, of the Ontario Mills, Oshawa for $1,000. Mr McGowan will put in the machinery at once, and push the mill to completion with all possible speed.

Q—What is rheumatism ?

A—Rheumatism is a humorous sensation that causes men to rub their joints with St. Jacobs Oil, play practical jokes, throw things around, wear crutches and stay indoosrs, swathed in red flannel.-- Drayton (O.) New Era.

Q.—What is St. Jacobs Oil ?

A—A peculiar substance of a very penetrating nature, which causes rheumatism to leave the system astonishingly puick,—insuring evenness of temper thereby, and ability to do one's work satisfactorily. It banishes crutches, retires flannels, produees happiness, and brings us down to a serene old age without the martyrdom of pain.—Excange.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restcres the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use becamc so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say :

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. A WORD OF CAUTION.

Beware of Opiates and powerful astringent drugs in the treatment of Bowel Complaints they may lull the pain and check Diarrhœa, etc., but are liable to produce inflammation. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is guaranteed safe and reliable even for infants, and is a specific for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic, Acute or Chronic Diarrhœa and summer complaints generally.

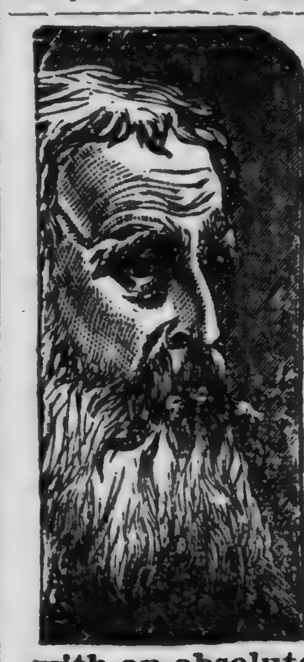
John Reid, police inspector, has stopped his paper and paid up. If in all things he did his duty thusly, he would do well. But as in many things he does his duty spitefully, he does ill. Friend Reid, we shall not cease to speak freely on your account.

DYSPEPSIA.

Is the most common of all diseases, and under ordinary drug treatment the most difficult to cure, it is a chronic weakness of the stomach with indigestion. The sensitive mucous membrance coating the stomach becomes irritated, and nearly all that enters the stomach continues to add fuel to the fire. Heartburn and sour eructions, belching of wind, Nausea, headache, variable Appetite, Costive Bowels, etc., are its prominent symptoms. Burdock Blood Bitters is a positive cure for this miserable diseases.

We regret to learn that a child of Mr. Campbell's of Flesherton, was run over by Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, of Markdale, and had its leg broken. Mr. McDiarmid did his best to save the little one.

Robert A. Wilson, Dispensing Chemist, Brockville, says under date of June 5th, '82, "I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has given my customers more satisfaction than any medicine in my store for the cure of summer complaints ; Diarrhoea, Dysentery, pain in the stomach, sea sickness, Piles etc., you can use my name etc ,



WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Biliousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Biliousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys.

Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Biliousness.

For 15 years has a span of horses and vehicle been running between Flesherton and Duntroon: it is now reduced to one horse and a buckboard. Many and loud are the complaints of the passengers.

A party of five spent a day of 24 hrs. 48 mins. between Markdale and Owen Sound jail on Sunday and Monday last. Sleep prevented their pleasure continuing longer. Neapolitaine and Julius were of the crew. The day was most enjoyable, though spent with one 'Misery.'

An old time resident of Markdale has returned to scenes of his youth. Having lately developed a taste for travel and business combined, he set out for Winnipeg, forwarding cattle; but the air of the prairie was too much for his delicate health, and he will probably winter amongst us. We refer to Bill— beg pardon, Mr Wm. Scott.

A farmer, whose funds were too low to pay off his harvest hands, brought a fat cow hither to raise the filthy lucre. Not meeting our local butchers running with dollar bills to meet him, the noble yeoman turned the cow into a pasture, and hunted for cattle buyers and butchers. Returning, he was surprised to find the animal impounded. He can truly say, 'I was a stranger, and they took me ... in.'

We hope our correspondents will now make a "big push" and send in their weekly budgets promptly and regularly. We do not like to miss the newsy notes of our assistants at outside points, and we hope they will put s new energy into their pencils, and send us in live and pointed items pretty steadily. Send all the items that can be gathered; people like to read them and we like to get them. we will be happy to furnish envelopes, paper, etc. to intending correspondent, and will send the same to all parties who will use them.

A buggie load comprising Mrs R. Brown, her three children, and her mother, and Mrs C. W. Rutledge and child, seven in all, were crossing the railway track on Tuesday, when the horses took fright at an engine, and suddenly turning round upset the buggy, throwing out all the occupants, The team broke loose from the carriage, taking with them the pole and whiffletrees, but were captured in the village. The train hands assisted in gathering up the wounded, who were scratched and bruised, but fortunately no one was seriously injured. A few dollars spent on the buggy will remedy what might have been a very serious accident.

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, [illegible] TORONTO, ONT.

The position as regards the Toronto, Grey & Bruce and Northern North Western roads remains unchanged, so far as is known to the public. There seems to be no doubt, however, that a struggle for the possession of the lines is now going on between the Syndicate and Grand Trunk. We were informed by a well-known Railway man last week that there was scarcely a doubt that the Toronto, Grey & Bruce would go to the Syndicate, and that only a few days would elapse till the arrangement would be completed. Our informant seemed to think that both the Northern and North Western would also become Syndicate roads. Should all of these lines go to the Syndicate our position would be better than that of our rival Collingwood; and for the reason that we can obtain a branch from the Grand Trunk by a short line of 12 or 13 miles, while there would be no chance of a competing line being built to Collingwood. We trust, however, the result will be that the lines leading to Owen Sound and Collingwood will go into the hands of rival companies.—Advertiser.

HOW IT WORKS.

The purifying and healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry impart a healthy tone to the diseased mucous surfaces of the Stomach and Bowels. Its cooling, soothing properties counteract pain, its antiseptic properties correct canker and foul humour, and its tonic astringent nature corrects all exhaustive discharges—such as Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Cholera Morbus, and summer complaints generally.

Mr. Thos. Mullarky has set a good example to the property owners on the n. side of Mill st., by putting in a sidewalk opposite his property. If each would lay out a few dollars in this way we would soon have a good sidewalk to the station.

J. R. Bond, Druggist, &c., Schomberg writes, 'I have sold medicines for over twenty years, and no medicine could give better satisfaction than your Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild strawberry.' This medicine is the old reliable cure for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, and all summer camplaints.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

(SEAL) We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS

ON THE ROAD.

My route lies over the Credit Valley. I start out with a good impression of the road, as one still free from the claws of the monster Monopoly, which Grip pictures as a beast with the back of a turtle and the head of an elephant, with an excessively grand trunk. Further, I had understood that its officials were courteous, and anxious to maintain the confidence of the people, and its employes civil and intelligent. I must confess that my experience confirmed my anticipations on these points—in short, I found the line a well-managed one compared with other lines in Canada. The morning was bright when I left the Union Depot for Orangeville. Leaving behind me the already high-lifted curtain of smoke which hung over the metropolis; losing the brief glimpses afforded of the bay, with its bright sails and busy steamers; and passing through the sprightly suburb of Parkdale, now active with building operations, so numerous as to give it and Brockton the appearance of being just turned out to order from the hands of the contractor, we dash forward at a rapidly increasing rate through the cooling morning air amid scenes of suburban comfort, till is reached, two or three of the proverbia tall chimneys standing out over the opposite banks of a picturesque ravine, in the bottom of which runs the Humber. There are spots here well suited for picnics, provided the owners were agreeable, and the village itself seems capable of development, especially in mills or factories.

COOKSVILLE,

a quiet, unpretentious little village in a fine farming district, is next passed, and we are soon brought to and Streetsville junction, whose stations are only two miles apart, but whose urban proximity is such that they may almost be said to be one village. Streetsville has now about 1,300 inhabitants, and has several dry-goods and general stores in which a brisk trade is done. A newspaper and a branch bank are at present among the ambitions of Streetsville, and the latter at least is seriously needed. Brampton, twelve miles away, has close relations with the village. The River Credit runs near the village in the direction of Brampton, and so on north-westerly towards Orangeville, and from this river the railway takes its name, although this is now the least important part of th road. At Streetsville junction passengers change cars for Orangeville.

STREETSVILLE,

BRAMPTON,

a town of between 3,000 and 4,000, looks flourishing, as well as pleasant, when viewed from the station. It has a large agricultural works, several factories, and is well advanced from a literary point of view, having three good papers—the Conservator, the Times, and the Banner.

The country hitherto passed has been level, with fields of ripened grain continually in prospect. Now, however, the monotony of the wide stretch—at least, it is monotonous from a mere artistic aspect—is gradually relieved by undulations which break into wild and picturesque hills when Riversdale is passed, and culminate in the charming mountain scenery of the now celebrated

FORKS OF THE CREDIT.

Here a considerable elevation has been reached by the train, which winds along the skirts of the mountain, with 500 feet of craggy heights to the left above, and 300 or 400 feet of bowery ravine to the right below. On all sides the fresh green mountain trees grow luxuriantly, and where the rocks are not hidden by these they are embowered in thick bushes of raspberries, thimble berries, and blackberries, the ripened fruit sending forth a perfume so grateful that all car windows are opened and all hands protrude their heads (if such a bull can be used) to inhale the delightful breeze. Stoutly puffs the engine as the train creeps her devious way up the heights, showing bright patches of the river which winds below. At last, as we skirt round what seems to be the highest hill we come rumbling on a bridge which curves with a grand sweep across a gorge, and here, where the two mountain streams join, are the forks of the credit. A prettier sight could not be witnessed. The bridge is 1,400 feet long, and 86 feet above the bottom of the ravine. As the train rolls slowly over, the eye take in the clear dashing waters of the two streams, which meet, embrace, and become one as they flow in quiet depths through a broadening valley where nestle, in a sort of sleepy hollow, the rustic homes of a few residents; it takes in the blue perspective of part of the long valley up through which we have come; it takes in the sudden break in the range of hills across the valley, and the wild and rugged aspect of the steep heights above. The little patches of garden below, some enclosed in rude cribs by the streamside; the rustic log bridge spanning one of the streams where sit two or three holiday-makers in dreamy contemplation; the log and weather-board houses on the other side below the great bridge, where some girls are cooking the family meals in the open air; the thin funnels of smoke reaching from the depths below to the blue heights above bringing to mind the pictures of Fennimore Cooper, or the scenes in Hiawatha—all these details make up a spectacle enrapturing to any lover of mountain scenery, and charming even to those who can only see the picnic side of nature's beauties. All that has been said of this place as a picnic resort is fully justified, and in the future it is bound to become famous. A number of parties were camping out in various spots, and already quite a number of excursions had come from the city and other points. The spot has only lately been brought to the notice of excursionists, but in a few years it must become one of the most favorite resorts.

ORANGEVILLE.

On arriving in Orangeville I found quite a crowd about the station, and the town manifested considerable stir although the day was rainy. An excursion party had come up from Toronto, intending to spend a day at the Forks of the Credit; but a rain came on and the railway officials considerately allowed the party to change their programme and go on to Orangeville. Arrived here the civic authorities courteously allowed them the free use of the town hall in which to have their luncheon and a dance in the afternoon—all of which was much appreciated by the Torontonians and will doubtless redound to the benefit of the town some day, as acts of public hospitality always do. A comfortable dinner at that comfortable hotel the Paisley House was an agreeable prelude to the despatch of business, which appeared to be good in all branches in Orangeville, from conversations with some leading firms. Several excursion parties had visited the town this years chiefly from Toronto. The Orangevillians, however, when they do not go to the metropolis repair, when they want an outing, to the picturesque wilds of the Forks or to the charming shores of the Caledon or Mulmur Lakes—breezy, clear and pleasant fresh water sheets of 300 to 600 acres in extent, in which fish and game abound to the delight of the local sportsmen. Returning from Orangevill in the afternoon my route lay over the Elora and Fergus branch of the Credit Valley which is some 27 miles in extent from the junction at

CHURCH'S FALLS.

This place takes its name on the principle on which a good many American localities receive their patronyms—because there is neither a church nor a falls to be seen. There is a small cataract, however, where runs a romantic mill and the surroundings of the place are very beautiful from a scenic point of view. The up train was somewhat late and while we waited to connect with it, the passengers wandered forth along the quiet mountain sides where raspberries were to be had in plenty for the picking. A shrill whistle echoing through the glades brought us back again and we were soon rattling through the twilight air at the rate of 35 or 40 miles an hour. Only one car a combination carriage, which serves as a passenger car and baggage car, is used on this branch, but the freight business is good and is fast developing. It was quite dark when we arrived at

ELORA,

and the town, true to the best business habits, had closed its work for the day and scarcely a place, except the hotels, was to be found open. Elora is prettily situated at the junction of the Irvine and Grand Rivers, whose rocky and tortuous banks afford some lovely scenery. Just below one of the bridges is a romantic spot where a cool spring of the clearest water flows from the rock, and at the confluence of the rivers there are several caves, the well-beaten paths to which show them to be an object of considerable curiosity to visitors and villagers. Among the industri s of Elora is a carpet factory which has been running with excellent success for the past year or so. They run by steam and water power and keep 15 or 20 looms in operation. The fabrics made are a kind of kidderminster, known as two ply ingrained, of which three varieties are made and about thirty different patterns turned out. They manufacture expressly for the Canadian trade, which is reached largely through John Macdonald & Co. of Toronto. Leaving Elora early in the morning I reach which is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Grand River only four miles distant, Fergus and Elora are considered pretty well matched, each having its weekly newspaper, which cover about the same field as far as country circulation goes; and each having about the same population. Like Elora, Fergus is built nearly altogether of light colored stone, and has several mills and factories on the banks of the river. For some reason, however, the three or four tanneries of the town have been idle for nearly a year and the sewing machine factory has not been in operation for some time past. Building operations, notwithstanding this, are going on and a large new hotel is nearly completed.

FERGUS

DOWN THE LINE–

from Fergus to the main line we pass part of the rich grazing country for which the country of Wellington is famous and two or three stations, such as Douglas, Garafaxa, Hillsburg and Erin, are rising in importance.

Ambidextrous Men.

One of the New York papers not long ago had an article on right and left-handed people, or ambidexters, in which several remarkable instances of persons possessing this faculty were given. Strange to say, however, no mention was made of Ben Lusby or George Tiffany. Lusby is famous the country over, and is known as the lightning ticket seller. He travelled for many years with the largest circuses, and received almost fabulous pay, being as great a curiosity as anything to be seen in the tents. He used both hands in selling tickets, taking in money, handing out tickets and making change more rapidly with each than an ordinary ticket seller could with both. It was no unusual thing to see him select six or eight full-price children's tickets, receive a $10 or $20 bill, and pick out and return the change with one hand, while he was selling one or two tickets at a time and making change at the same time with the other hand.

George Tiffany, who had always had a large acquaintance with theatrical and show people, and who was a friend of Lusby, possessed the same faculty to a considerable ex ent, and on several occasions gave exhibitions to his friends of his ability to imitate Lusby, having probably practiced under his direction. He was scarcely a fourth as rapid as Lusby, but was acknowledged "in the profession" to be, with the exception of Lusby, the only two-handed ticket-seller in the world. Between the men, there was a marked contrast in appearance. Tiffany was very short, very stout, very jovial, and easy-going and slow in speech at nearly all times, always ready for a joke, and generally liked by his acquaintances, while Lusby, when not at his post, appeared rather taciturn and gloomy, and even among the most intimate friends rarely appeared amused at anything, and seldom laughed or smiled. Both were particular in dress, but while Tiffany's appearance was unchanged in the ticket-office, Lusby in the same place was metamorphosed. His coat and vest were thrown off, in warm weather his necktie and collar generally followed, his eyes seemed to sink back in his head and bright hectic spots, appeared on his cheeks which looked drawn and sunken. At those times he was a curious study to the medical men who saw him at his busiest moments, and more than one expressed the opinion that he could not long survive the strain to which he subjected himself.

Instances of people who write and make figures with both hands are by no means rare. In the old St. Louis Democrat office, before the partnership was dissolved, two accountants were employed who, in posting the books, generally made figures with one hand and posted the items with the right. A bookkeeper in one and a cashier in another large wholesale house in St. Louis now work in the same way, and a reporter on a morning paper writes with either hand, and it is impossible to extinguish any difference in the formation of the letters.

A more remarkable instance of dual faculties than any mentioned is that of a gentleman well known in St. Louis, Mr. E. C. Lackland. Mr. Lackland was for some time Treasurer of the Fair Association, and excited no little attention and remark among those who saw him using alternately either hand in writing letters or messages. The on-lookers were, however, still more astonished to see him when in a hurry grasp a pen or pencil and write rapidly with both hands, and would have been yet more amazed had they known that the messages he was at work on at the same time were addressed to different people and entirely different [in character. When not busy enough to employ both hands, he generally uses the left, but the character of the chirography is the same, and it is doubtful if he himself knows the difference. He does not seem to consider himself possessed of an unusual gift or talent, and would, no doubt, have been much amused had he heard the remark made by an acquaintance, who, after seeing him write two letters at once, confidentially informed a friend that he must have his brains parted in the middle or be possessed of two sets. The science of medicine teaches that unusual mental strain or activity correspondingly depresses the system physically, but the rule evidently does not apply to Mr. Lackland.

The Rescue of Niagara Falls.

More than once we have spoken of the fatal injury done to the State of New York and to the national character itself, by the desecration of Niagara Falls. In the letters of correspondents during this summer we have observed a complaint of the diminishing public interest in the Falls as a resort, and of the great falling off in the number of visitors. This is due to the total want of care in preserving the attractive character of the neighborhood. Every kind of disagreeable object is huddled along the shore, until the complete vulgarization of all the approaches and points of vantage, the nuisance of encroaching buildings and hackmen and Indian shops, and a multitude of petty annoyances, fairly repel the visitor, and give t e worst of reputations for comfort and agreeability to a resort which should be among the most delightful in the country. When the immediate neighborhood of Niagara is covered with factories and tenement-houses and their dependencies, the sublime spectacle, one of the true wonders of the world, will be effectually and forever lost as an influence of moral elevation and happiness. And this fate is already impending. One of the islands has been already ruined as a part of the landscape; others are threatened. The bank all along the American rapids has been shorn of foliage, of trees and vines, and covered with mills, barns, sheds, and unsightly structures. In two years the youngest heir of the Goat Island estate will come of age, and the island will be then sold and covered with factories. This is the time for action to save Niagara Falls. A few months later, even, will be too late. Is it worth while to preserve this natural wonder for the delight of the world? If it is, what shall be done?

Niagara is a great water-power, and there is no need of losing it as such. But that is not the question. It is not whether Niagara is more valuable as factory power or as beauty and sublimity, but how it shall best serve both us and beauty. The answer is simple, for the situation is obvious. The river above the Falls lies high over the lower country. Its power is available everywhere. By drawing it off above the cataract, and reserving a little space of shore, bank, and island all around the Falls, the problem is solved: the factories are built below; the cataract is saved. A strip of land broadening from a hundred feet at the end to eight hundred or a thousand feet above the Falls, inclosing the catar ct and its immediate neighborhood, and capable of such landscape treatment as to plant out every unsightly object, is all that is necessary. Such a plan was suggested four or five years ago, and was most urgently commended by leading men on both sides of the river. But it was a general proposition, evidently most proper and desirable, but involving expense and trouble. It was nobody's business in particular, and after an admirable report from Mr. Olmsted, and some attempts to arouse public interest, the subject dropped.

The representations now made, however, show that without prompt action Niagara is lost, except as a water-power. The rescue of the cataract, its poper preservation, and the permanent maintenance of its immediate vicinity as a public park, is a duty which the State of New York may wisely undertake. It is one of the public works for a high public purpose, like the gift of statues of eminent New-Yorkers to the Capitol of Washington, which public opinion would undoubtedly authorize. There is no doubt that if a few active, intelligent, and interested men in the State should take the project in hand upon the general basis of Mr. Olmsted's report, inviting him to make such further suggestions as might occur, the work would be done. Suitable representatives to the Governor and general discussion in the press would unquestionably procure a recommendation to the Legislature, which would find then a responsive public spirit, so that it would be seed sown in a fruitful soil. Let New York spare herself the shame of the practical obliteration of Niagara Falls.—Harpers' Weekly.

A street railway has been laid between Athens and the Piræus, which serves the whole city, passing by the Parthenon and the Acropolis. But what a prosaic, every-day sort of age this is when such things can be as horse cars in the land of the ancient Greeks.

The Hay Field.

From the Christian World.

Is any season so blithe and merry,
So gay with flowers, or so sweet with song,
As that of the rose or the ripened cherry,
When nights are tranquil and days are long?
The earth has forgotten her time of sadness,
The silence and shadows have passed away;
There is nothing but universal gladness
Among the hay.

This is the season when lads and lasses
Are up betimes in the sunny field;
When the swish of the scythe lays low the grasses
And the passing hours new pleasures yield.
The time of the festive, sweet hay-making,
When the sporting laugh and the joyous word,
And the song of grateful love partaking
Are all day heard.

Why should we squander the hours in sighing
That things which are lovely do not stay,
That the dancing grasses so soon are dying?
Let us be merry amid the hay.
There is time enough for the coming sorrow,
There is wealth of beauty around us yet;
Let us use to-day and leave to-morrow,
Nor God forget.

Blue and bright is the sky above us,
Sweet with flowers is the scented air;
All things whisper that God doth love us,
All sounds woo us to happy prayer;
The forest glades are with joy songs ringing,
From morn to night of the happy day;
Let human voices to Him be singing
From fields of hay.

Though far away are the fields of childhood,
Of glad light-heartedness, careless mirth,
There is pleasure still in the field and wild wood,
And joy for all dwellers in God's fair earth.
What does it matter that we grow older?
The best shall come when we pass away;
And we learn a lesson that makes faith bolder
From fields of hay.

Nothing is coming that need oppress us;
Let us raise in triumph a trustful song:
God is our Father, and He will bless us,
His love makes summer the whole year long.
Though skies should darken and flowers be failing,
Though life be stormy and days grow dim,
God's power and mercy are aye prevailing;
We trust in Him.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

How the Children Raised Money for Charity.

Many years ago in a little village among the hills, lived some children whose names you would know very well if you saw them here; but it would not do to make them public, for, to tell the truth, some of them have not grown any older yet in heart, although their merry faces are wrinkled with the smiles of age, and the tops of their heads resemble snow-drifts. As they lived long before the iron horse had dug through the mountain barriers, only one of them had ever seen a city. He had made a trip to Boston on the stage, starting before daylight, and riding all the next day and night over the route now travelled by the express train in a few hours. The hero of this remarkable expedition was named Joseph, and, like the "dunces who have been to Rome," he seldom failed to allude in every possible manner to his adventures abroad. So, when the children met to discuss the project of giving a theatrical performance in order to raise money enough to buy a Thanksgiving turkey for a poor widow, Joseph was, of course, chosen manager, because he had seen a real play at the Museum.

"My friends," said the oracle, in his opening speech "you will need a curtain, and a place in which to hang it."

"My father will let us use the mill-chamber," said blue-eyed Katy, the miller's daughter; "for the stream is so low that he will not work there for a month, and there are lots of boards which we can use if we do not spoil them."

"Very well," said Joseph; "to-morrow will be Saturday, and we will meet at the mill to build the stage and cast our plays: so let us all bring any pieces of cloth we can borrow, and as many play books as possible."

So that bright afternoon sun, as it shone cheerily through the chinks and cracks of the mill-garret, lit up the bright faces of the children who were peparing for the opening of their theatre. The boys first brought up the boards and carefully piled them at the western end of the room, until they had formed a platform three feet high across one end of the chamber, while the girls sewed into three curtains the motley strips of cloth which they had borrowed from their mothers' rag-bags—the odd combinations of materials and shades thus obtained producing an effect very much like some of the grotesque draperies which the modern art-lovers profess to admire. The most showy piece was chosen for the central curtain, upon the edge of which brass rings were sewed. The boys next stretched a wire across the room at just the same distance from the stage as the height of the curtain, on which the girls had strung the rings before it was fastened in place. A post was then put up at each side of the curtain and securely nailed to the stage and at the top beams of the room, and the two other pieces of cloth tacked, one on each side, to the post and to the sides of the room. Two other curtains were made, large enough to fill the spaces from the posts to the back of the room, thus forming a dressing-room on each side of the stage, the entrances to which were made by pushing away the curtains at the front and rear corners, as required. The only change of scene from interior to exterior was made by pine-trees fastened into wooden blocks, which could be placed in various positions. The setting sun lighted up the completed stage, and the busy children grouped themselves in restful attitudes upon it, to select and cast the play. Learned works had, at that time, little place among the libraries of the simple farm-folk, who were content with "Pilgrim's Progress," "Fox's Martyrs," and the weekly visits of the Ploughman. But the lawyer's daughter, Annie, had brought a volume of Shakespeare's plays, and golden-haired Mabel had her "Mother Goose," the best and only play-book she had ever known.

"Shakespeare," said Joseph, "is a good writer, for I saw one of his plays myself. 'Hamlet' was the name of it, and I will be Hamlet, for I know how to act."

The children, of course, agreed, and each accepted the part which the manager assigned to him or her. Maggie was to be the Queen, because she was so tall, and Dick was unanimously chosen for the Ghost, because he was so thin. Bill Jones was offered the part of Polonius, because he liked to use big words; and sweet Mabel Drake took Ophelia, because she had lovely long hair and a brand-new white dress. Laertes was given to Sam Williams, because he was a good fighter—for they decided to have the combat with fists, as swords were very dangerous, even if they could get any, which they could not. The only sword in the village was somewhat damaged through long use as a poker by old Squire Hawks, who was sulky when he was not chosen captain of the militia. The minor parts of the play were given out by lot, and thus some of the children had two or three each, as there were so many, and all were told again to come on Wednesday, ready for rehearsal. But when Wednesday afternoon came, they did not know their parts, for the words were so long and hard they could not remember them, and it seemed impossible even to the energetic Joseph to have "Hamlet" ready by Saturday afternoon, the day announced for the opening of the show. So Shakespeare was given up, and little Maud ventured to say that he was not half as good as Mother Goose. Struck with this idea, the children gave up their search for the unknown, and wisely resolved to content themselves with something less ambitious. Mabel Drake, in full costume copied from the picture, read the rhymes as they were acted with spirit by those who knew and loved them. Joseph resigned the part of Hamlet for that of Bobby Shaftoe, and sweet Kitty Jones brought tears to the eyes of all as she knelt at the flax-wheel in grief for the drowned sailor, who returned triumphant in the next scene, in a neat sailor-suit, which seemed to have passed through the shipwreck uninjured. Maggie looked and acted the tall daughter to perfection, and little Maud was lovely as the bride, in poke bonnet, as she rode proudly in the wheelbarrow, the chosen bride of little Eddie, who preferred her to the short, the greedy, or the progressive girl of the period. The hall was filled by the delighted parents of the children on that memorable Saturday, and the entrance fee of ten cents each gave the Widow Simpkins such a Thanksgiving dinner as she had never had before.—G. B. Bartlett, in ST. NICHOLAS for September.

MORSELS FOR SUNDAY CONTEMPLATION.

Hope is a fatigue ending in a deception.

Man pardons and forgets; woman pardons only.

Merit is born with men; happy those with whom it dies.

Love comes when we expect it the least and dread it the most.

The most manifest sign of wisdom is continued cheerfulness.

To be faithful without loving is to have the patriotism of virtue.

Every one of our actions is rewarded or punished, only we do not admit it.

Women love themselves as much as they can; men as much as they wish to.

Hate enters sometimes into great souls: envy comes only from little minds.

Where there is much pretension much has been borrowed; nature never pretends.

There are few people more often in the wrong than those who cannot endure to be so.

We should not measure the excellence of our work by the trouble it has cost us to produce it.

Human nature is so constituted that all see and all judge better in the affairs of other men than in their own.

It is good discretion not to make too much of any man at the first; because one cannot hold out that proportion.

To pretend to have many good friends is a sweet illusion of people who believe that they merit the affection of others.

All the while thou livest ill thou hast the trouble, distractions, inconveniences of life, but not the sweets and true use of it.

We ought in humanity no more to despise a man for the misfortunes of the mind than for those of the body, when they are such as he cannot help.

There is no secret in the heart which our actions do not disclose. The most consummate hypocrite cannot at all times conceal the workings of the mind.

Our affections are like our teeth; they make us suffer while they are coming, after they have come, and when we lose them. They are not less the smile of our life.

In youth, grief is a tempest which makes you ill; in old age it is only a cold wind, which adds one more wrinkle to your face and one more white lock to the others.

The best rules to form a young man are to talk little, to hear much, to reflect alone upon what has passed in company, to distrust one's own opinions and value others that deserve it.

It is a secret known to but few, yet of no small use in the conduct of life, that when you fall into a man's conversation the first thing you should consider is whether he has a greater inclination to hear you, or that you should hear him.

What makes us like new acquaintances is not so much any weariness of our old one, or the pleasure of change, as disgust at not being sufficiently admired by those who know us too well, and the hope of being more so by those who do not know so much of us.

Allow no man to be so free with you as to praise you to your face. Your vanity by this means will want its food. At the same time your passion for esteem will be more fully gratified; men will praise you in their actions; where you now recei e one compliment you will then receive twenty civilities.

It is an old saying that charity begins at home; but this is no reason it should not go abroad; a man should live with the world as a citizen of the world; he might have a preference for the particular quarter or square, or even alley in which he lives, but he should have a generous feeling for the welfare of the whole.

These are sensible remarks. A pastor's business is with the souls of his flock, not with the fashion of their dress or the style of their hair. A girl who "bangs" her hair may be a very pious and modest young girl; while she who prefers her's straight without, is just as likely to be everything that she should not be. There is no saving power in bangs, but a girl's chances of salvation are not heightened by denying herself "bangs and bustles." And besides, the girls won't mind, any way, so where's the use of anathematising them?

Among the vast audience of nearly 3,000 people were Cardinal Newman and many leaders of society and celebrated musicians. Gounod conducted the performance.

The Springs Did No Good.

The following item is given for the consideration of those of our readers who are in search of just such an article as that referred to in the following statement of Mrs. Geo. A. Clark, a well-known lady of St. Catharines:—"I cannot refrain," says Mrs. C., "from bearing testimony to the wonderful effects produced by the use of the very best remedy in the world, St. Jacobs Oil, for rheumatism. I had rheumatism and dropsy and did not walk a step for fifteen years. I tried nearly everything our most skillful physicians prescribed,—Clifton Springs,—St. Catharine Springs, etc., residing with a celebrated German doctor, who pronounced my case incurable. Thinking everything of no use I was induced to try St. Jacobs Oil, and it has certainly done wonders for me. I heartily recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did. I have not had any use of my right arm for more than a year; now, however, I can raise it very nearly to my head."

In the annual report of the British Post-Master-General just received in Washington, it is stated that the United States sent to Great Britain 9½ million newspapers and received from there 7½ millions during the last fiscal year.

Edison's Electric Absorbent Belts

do more for humanity than drugs can do and are not dangerous. Their stimulating recuperating qualities are truly wonderful.

Woman and Her Diseases

is the title of a large illustrated treatise, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., sent to any address for three stamps. It teaches successful self-treatment.

Warning.

We regret that it is necessary to warn the public against so-called respectable druggists, who for a few cents additional profit, are palming off a dangerous and flesh-eating substitute for that great remedy, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. As Putnam's is a simple, purely vegetable compound, and non-poisonous in composition, no surprise need be felt, that serious results have attended the use of caustic applications substituted as above for the genuine "Corn Extractor." "Threw Away Her Supporter."

DR. PIERCE:—A neighbour of ours was suffering from "female weakness" which the doctors told her could not be cured without a supporter. After considerable persuasion my wife induced her to try your "Favorite Prescription." After using one bottle she threw away the supporter and did a large washing, which she had not done in two years before.

How It Works.

The purifying and healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry impart a healthy tone to the diseased mucous surfaces of the Stomach and Bowels. Its cooling, soothing properties counteract pain, its antiseptic properties correct canker and foul humour, and its tonic astringent nature corrects all exhaustive discharges—Such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Cholera Morbus, and Summer Complaints generally.

A Word of Caution.

Beware of Opiates and powerful astringent drugs in the treatment of Bowel Complaints, they may lull the pain and check Diarrhœa. etc., but are liable to produce inflammation, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is guaranteed safe and reliable, even for Infants, and is a specifice for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic, Acute or Chronic Diarhœa and Summer Complaints generally.

Dyspepsia

is the most common of all diseases, and under ordinary drug treatment the most difficult to cure, it is a chronic weakness of the stomach with indigestion. The sensitive mucous membrane coating the stomach becomes irritated, and nearly all that enters the stomach continues to add fuel to the fire. Heartburn and Sour Eructions, Belching of Wind, Nausea, Headache, Variable Appetite, Costive Bowels, etc., and its prominent symptoms. Burdock Blood Bitters is a positive cure for this miserable disease.

A Clergyman's Testimony.

W. E. Gifford, Pastor M. E. Church Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he tells us in a recent letter that he considers it the best family medicine now before the country for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

The introduction of electricity as a medicine is causing the wise heads of the world to look about. The demand for Briggs' Electric Oil is truly wonderful.

A Durban despatch says:—Besides the Kaffir chief Secoenceni, his son and fourteen followers were killed. The killing was done by Memper, a chief put into his place by the British.

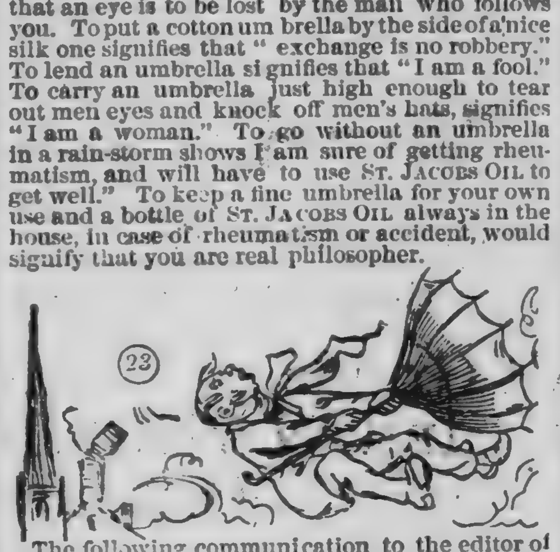
FACTS ABOUT UMBRELLAS.

Antiquarians say that the umbrella was invented shortly after the flood, and has been the least improved upon of all appliances for human comfort, the shape being now as it was in those youthful days of the world. An umbrella is much like a pigeon as to the question of possession—the last one who gets it owns it. The following facts about umbrellas—especially the last one—may serve every reader a splendid purpose sooner or later: To place your umbrella in a rack indicates that it is about to change owners. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but drippings of the rain, indicates courtship. When the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings, it indicates marriage. To carry it at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man who follows you. To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a nice silk one signifies that "exchange is no robbery." To lend an umbrella signifies that "I am a fool." To carry an umbrella just high enough to tear out men eyes and knock off men's hats, signifies "I am a woman." To go without an umbrella in a rain-storm shows I am sure of getting rheumatism, and will have to use ST. JACOBS OIL to get well." To keep a fine umbrella for your own use and a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL always in the house, in case of rheumatism or accident, would signify that you are real philosopher.



The following communication to the editor of the Salem (Mass.) Register shows how an artist treated his visitor: "I would have accepted your kind invitation to visit you in your new quarters with pleasure before this had not my old enemy, Mr. Rheumatism, pounced on me so suddenly. He arrived last Friday, and, without stopping to send up his card, rushed in and grasped me by the hand with such a grip that in a few hours my hand and wrist were so badly swollen and painful that I felt as though one of Mr. Hatch's coal teams had run over me. Mr. Rheumatism has been a constant visitor of mine for several years; he always swells and put on a great many airs, making himself at home, devouring my substance and leaving me poor in flesh and pocket. Last winter he came and stayed two months. I then decided that the next time he came I would change his diet. I was somewhat at a loss what to feed him with, but finally concluded to give him three square meals a day of ST. JACOBS OIL—morning, noon and night. This fare he is disgusted with, and is packing up his trunk and will leave by to-morrow or next day, says he cannot stop any longer, as he has pressing business elsewhere. He is a treacherous fellow, and he intends visiting some of our Salem friends; if he does, just give him the same fare that I did and he won't stop long. J. S. LEFAVOUR.

Ayer's Ague Cure is an infallible cure for Fever and Ague in all its forms. The proprietors warrant it, and their word is as good as a U.S. bond. Trial proves it.

Colds, coughs, and such diseases as lead to consumption, may be checked, and often cured, by the use of one 25 cent bottle of Wistar's Pulmonic Syrup of Wild Cherry and Horehound. It is worth a trial.

VEGETINE is composed of the best vegetable ingredients the dispensary of Nature furnishes. Their juices are extracted in a way which preserves their undiminished medical properties, making it one of the greatest cleansers of the blood that can be put together.

If your lungs are almost wasted by consumption Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will not cure you, yet as a remedy for severe coughs, and all curable bronchial, throat, and lung affections, it is unsurpassed. Send two stamps for Dr. Pierce's large pamphlet treatise on Consumption and Kindred Affections Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

Robert A. Wilson, Dispensing Chemist, Brockville, says, under date of June 5th, '82, "I have not the slighest hesitation in saying that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has given my customers more satisfaction than any medicine in my store for the cure of Summer Complaints, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Pain in the Stomach Sea Sickness, Piles, etc. You can use my name, etc."

J. B. Bond, Druggist, &c, Schomberg writes, "I have sold medicines for over twenty years, and no medicine could give better satisfaction than your Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry." This medicine is the old reliable cure for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, and all Summer Complaints.

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

TORONTO, ONT., Nov. 25, 1879.

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ., Boston:

Sir—I have much pleasure in testifying to the virtue of your Vegetine. For years past I have suffered exceedingly from chronic headache and general debility, from which I obtained no permanent relief until I was induced, about a month since, to try the Vegetine. I am now better in health than I have been for the last four years; enjoy my food better, am much stronger, and quite free from my old enemy, the headache. Hoping that my testimony may induce others to try the same remedy, I am

Respectfully yours,
MRS. D. A. JOHNSTON,
100 Lippincott Street.

I have very great pleasure in endorsing the above statement of the benefit to my wife's health, since she commenced the use of the Vegetine.

D. A. JOHNSTON,
Late Minister of the C. M. Church.

CHEERFULLY RECOMMENDS IT.

BROCKVILLE, ONT., Mar. 24, 1880.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have taken several bottles of your Vegetine. I consider it an excellent medicine, and most cheerfully recommend it to those suffering from General Debility.

I remain yours truly,
MRS. M. A. SMITH.

OTTAWA, ONT., Mar. 8, 1880.

Dear Sir—I have much pleasure in adding my quota to the already immense volume of certificates so deservedly eulogizing Vegetine. It is as stated a purely vegetable compound, and as an invigorator, purifier of the blood, and regulator of the action of the liver, has no equal. As yet I have never known it to fail in curing any of the many diseases for which it is recommended. It is rapidly becoming a popular medicine. Those who use it once, when necessity requires, call for it again.

W. A. JAMIESON.

WHAT IS CATARRH?

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxæmea, from retention of the effeted matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back part of the mouth causing ulceration of the throat; up the eustachian tubes, causing deafness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness, usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

To effect a cure the parasite must be removed or destroyed, hence inhalants and snuffs are worthless.

Some time since a well known physician of 40 years standing, after much experimenting, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease whether standing for one year or forty years. Sufferers should, without delay, communicate with the business manager, Mr. A. H. Dixon, 307 King St. West, Toronto, and get treatise free by enclosing stamp. Ask your druggist for it.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words, among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of the terrors to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their painful effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its early use in sudden attacks.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone if properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Kendall's Spavin Cure ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

At a recent weading in this vicinity an incident occurred which has amused the inhabitants immensely. A certain young aspirant for the "hand and heart" of a young lady guest, waxed wroth at not receiving an invitation also. So he mounted his Arab steed and mustered a band of followers, who marched forth with discordant music and the firing of guns to avenge the insult, under the shade of night. The band halted in front of the house in which the party were assembled, and with a shout of "Come on, boys," Commodore ——— (who by the way was not at all black by name or nature) scaled the fence and leaped into the front yard. But, alas! alas! for lack of courage and presence of mind, he was soon seized by the cuff of the neck, and after receiving a good application of sole leather, was pitched over the fence again. This seemed to unnerve the whole band who immediately took to their heels and ran. Commodore is a wiser man to-day though somewhat spotted with black.

For a poor plebeian apple! Now a peach,

Might well have tempted her.

THE FISHERWOMAN OF HONFLEUR.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH COMMUNE.

CHAPTER II.

Antoine, having, as already mentioned, remained at home for some months after his marriage, at length sailed once more on the long fishing cruise to the North Sea, which usually occupied a period of six months.

At this period the terrible war between France and Prussia was raging furiously. Paris was already threatened with siege, and the Germans were everywhere victorious. But of all the communities in France, the fisher-folk least troubled themselves with political affairs. Not that they were unpatriotic, for they heartily wished success to the cause and arms of France; but the French fishermen enjoy immunity from the military conscription—to which all other classes of the people, save the clergy, are more or less subject—on consideration of their being bound to enroll themselves in the national navy whenever their services are required.

So long as Antoine remained at home, Lucien had held himself aloof from Madeleine, who believed that, now she was married, he would cease to annoy her. She did not, therefore, think it worth while to cause uneasiness to her husband by acquainting him with the young man's previous ill conduct towards her. But no sooner had Antoine gone to sea, than Lucien recommenced his insulting importunities. He endeavoured to gain her favour by means of costly presents; but his presents were scornfully rejected, and he was plainly assured that if he did not forthwith cease his annoyances, she would take such measures to put an end to them as would give him cause for regret for the remainder of his life

Thus compelled to desist from his persecutions and to relinquish his base designs, Lucien became more determined than ever upon revenge; and though he could conceive of no scheme at present by means of which he could carry his craving for vengeance into effect, he resolved to wait and watch his opportunity. "Everything comes to him who has the patience to wait," he muttered to himself as he returned, raging with disappointment, to Paris.

But then came the siege, and for months he was imprisoned within the ramparts of the city, and Madeleine hoped and believed that she had rid herself of him for ever. At length the siege was raised. The Prussians marched in triumph into Paris, and the war came to an end. The Imperial power was overthrown; a Republic was proclaimed; and the vile mob and canaille of Paris sought to establish the power of the Commune, and succeeded for a while in maintaining a second Reign of Terror, during which pillage and murder were rife, and destruction was wrought upon many of the public buildings that the Prussian guns had spared. But though the headquarters of the Commune were in Paris, it had its supporters in other places, and especially in the towns situated on the banks of the Seine, between Paris and Havre de Grace. In all these places its emissaries were acting in seeking to persuade the poor, debased, and ignorant among the population to join its ranks.

And now Lucien Pierrot was again seen in Honfleur. He had at length worn out the patience of his father, whose eyes had become opened to his son's delinquencies, and, for the time being, the young man was paternally discarded. It was said that, out of spite, to annoy his father and gratify his own evil propensities, Lucien had leagued himself with the Commune, and had become one of the most active among its minor leaders. At all events, he was constantly to be found busily disseminating its atrocious doctrines; but persons who professed to be better informed in the matter than others, declared that Lucien Pierrot was in reality a paid government spy.

It was at this period that Antoine again came home from sea. He had been absent longer than usual, but had made a profitable voyage to various ports in his own lugger. Moreover, shortly before her husband's return, Madeleine had given birth to a son, which delighted the heart of the worthy young sailor. Little did he or the people of his native village trouble themselves about the Commune; probably few among them knew the meaning of the word; and so long as they were healthy and prosperous, it concerned them little whether France was an Empire or a Republic.

On the first day of his return, Antoine was seated, in the evening, opposite his happy young wife—now so proud of her maternity—in their snug little cottage, with the infant sleeping quietly in his cradle between them. Antoine had related the events of his voyage, and Madeleine was acquainting her husband with all that occurred in the village during his absence when suddenly rising from her chair, she approached a buffet, and took from a drawer a letter bearing the Paris post-mark, which she presented to her husband. "In my joy at seeing thee again at home, my Antoine," she said, smiling, "I had well nigh forgotten this letter, which I received a fortnight ago."

Antoine took the letter from his wife's hand. It was rather a strange and suspicious-looking document—so at least thought the young fisherman. It was weighty, and bore a huge red seal, which was unbroken.

"Thou hast not opened it, my Madeleine, said Antoine, who had rarely before in the course of his life had a letter addressed to him, and who looked upon it with something like alarm in the expression of his countenance.

"Nay, my husband. It is directed to thee," said Madeleine. "I had no right to open it without thy permission."

"But thou knowest I cannot read," said Antoine. This was true; the young fisher-lads had to work from so early an age that few of them could read or write. The girls were, as before remarked, better educated.

"If thou wilt, I will read it for thee," Madeleine replied.

The portentous seal was broken, and when the letter was unfolded, a piece of folded parchment fell from it on to the table.

Madeleine proceeded to read the letter aloud. It was nothing very alarming after all. It was written by an avocat in Paris, who informed Antoine, that through the decease of one Marie Lupin, at the advanced age of eighty-nine, he had inherited the sum of fifteen thousand francs, bequeathed by will to her grand-nephew Antoine Duroc, by the aforesaid Marie Lupin; and that it was desirable that he, Antoine Duroc, should come to Paris at an early day to receive the money, which was in the hands of the avocat.

"Fifteen thousand francs! It is quite a fortune, my husband," cried Madeleine, laying the letter aside, and opening and reading the inclosure, which was merely a copy of the will. "Our little Antoine will some day be a rich man,' she added, glancing lovingly at the sleeping infant.

"Marie Lupin!" exclaimed Antoine. 'It must be my old aunt Marie, whom I have never seen in my life! It is strange she should leave me anything. Only think, my Madeleine, fifteen thousand francs!"

"But must thou go to Paris, Antoine, and thou but just returned to me?"

"'Twill occupy but a few days, ma petite," replied Antoine, who had never visited Paris, and though loath to leave his young wife even for a day, was pleased with the idea of seeing the great city.

"But just now, Antoine, when 'tis said there is such dreadful trouble in Paris?"

"It will not concern me, Madeleine. I shall return to thee as soon as I have received the legacy."

Madeleine was much troubled; but it appeared necessary that her husband should do as the avocat requested, and she thought it would be wrong on her part to object to Antoine's undertaking the journey.

Two or three days afterwards, the cargo having been discharged from the lugger and sold by auction in the fish market, and the vessel having been left in charge of the mate, Antoine set forth for Paris by railroad, his wife, up to the moment of his departure, entreating him to take great care of himself, and to hasten back to her as soon as possible.

By this time the Commune had nearly run its destructive course. The newly established Republican government, with M. Thiers at its head, had been terribly frightened at the excesses of the Communists, and had resorted to dreadfully severe measures for their suppression. To be suspected was to be denounced and condemned; the government spies were active, and it was said that many innocent persons were punished along with the guilty. Lucien Pierrot, who had been on a visit to Honfleur, chanced to return to Paris on the same day on which Antoine took his seat in a railway carriage for the first time in his life—Lucien travelling by the same train. Unobserved by either, he had witnessed the parting between Madeleine and her husband, and wondered greatly what was the object of the young fisherman's visit to the capital.

To Antoine, Lucien was a perfect stranger; but Lucien would have recognized the features of the young fisherman even if he had not witnessed the parting scene between the husband and wife. Burning with a desire for revenge, he resolved to keep watch over the young man on his arrival in Paris, and if any opportunity for wreaking vengeance upon him should present itself, to take advantage thereof.

The train duly arrived in Paris; and the two young men passed out of the depot, Lucien following close behind Antoine. He observed the young fisherman apparently asking directions, as a stranger, from several persons whom he met; and saw him, after he had wandered about for some time, looking around him with the wondering air of a provincial who has visited a great capital for the first time. Finally he tracked him to the bureau of an avocat in the Rue du Faubourg St.-Antoine. Wondering more than ever what could have brought the young fisherman thither, Lucien remained on the watch till Antoine, in the course of half an hour, reappeared, accompanied by a clerk, who conducted him to a small hotel near by, to which he had been recommended by the avocat.

It was already late in the day; and believing that the object of his animosity was safely housed for the night, Lucien left the spot and went about his own affairs; but at an early hour next morning he stood opposite the hotel, and waited for the unsuspecting Antoine. Nor had he long to wait, for presently the young fisherman sallied forth, and proceeded direct to the bureau, which he shortly afterwards left, apparently well satisfied with the result of his second interview with the lawyer.

Anxious as was Antoine to return home to his wife and child, he would have been something more than mortal if he could have resisted the temptation to look around him in the great capital which he had now visited for the first time. He decided to spend the day in roaming about the city and looking at the grand shops, which displayed treasures such as he had never imagined to exist in the world, and in purchasing some trifling presents for Madeleine and his little Antoine, ere setting forth on his return to Honfleur early the next morning.

Charity Sermons.

Dean Swift's brief but celebrated charity sermon, delivered in Dublin, on the text, "He who giveth unto the poor lendeth unto the Lord," has been read by every one, for the entire discourse is contained in a single line—"If you like the security, down with the dust." We have heard of another sermon, preached not long since in behalf of an eleemosynary institution, which concluded in this style:—'Such is the importance and excellence of this institution that no man can possibly be prevented from bestowing liberally, according to his ability. Whoever, therefore, shrinks from his duty on this occasion must be inevitably concluded to be in debt!' It brought the legal tenders.—Harper's Monthly.

The Early History of Kissing.

As an act expressive of endearment, kissing would appear to be the most natural. "'Tis certain," says Steele, "Nature was its author, and that it began with the first courtship." Although, however, the universal symbol of affection throughout the civilised world, yet, in days gone by, it was entirely unknown to many races, such as the aborigines of Australia, the New Zealanders, and the Tahitians. Sir John Lubbock, in his "Prehistoric Times," speaking of the various ways by which the feelings are expressed in different countries, has shown that by the Esquimaux kissing was formerly unknown, and remarks that the hill tribes of Chittagong do not say "kiss me," but "smell me." Indeed, the circumstance that certain rude tribes have no knowledge of what may be regarded as one of the very earliest forms of primitive culture, may be considered as a proof of primeval barbarism. The fact, too, is all the more remarkable because from the earliest ages in the world's history—from its very infancy—the act of kissing has been handed down as the natural expression of affection. And so one would have imagined that the slightest intercourse of cultured races with uncivilized communities would at once have taught them almost intuitively to embrace so simple an exponent of feeling. Without, however, further discussing this subject, which is rather one for the student of anthropology, there can be no doubt that the custom of kissing is of all acts the most universal.

As a mode of salutation we may trace the custom of kissing to a very remote period, numerous instances occurring in the sacred writings. Thus we read how men saluted the sun, the moon, and stars by kissing the hand, a superstition of which Job says he was never guilty—the same honour having been tendered to Baal. But, apart from such references as these, abundant evidence of the universality of this practice in past and modern times is to be found in the writings of most countries. The Greeks, we know, were in the habit of kissing the lips, hands, knees, or feet, in salutations, according as they considered the person worthy of more or less respect. In Homer we see Priam kissing the hands and embracing the knees of Achilles while he supplicates for the body of Hector. The custom also prevailed in ancient Rome, and Mr. D'Israeli, in his "Curiosities of Literature," referring to it, remarks how "the great respect paid to the tribunes, consuls, or dictators obliged individuals to live with them in a more distant and respectful manner; and, instead of embracing them as formerly, they considered themselves as fortunate if allowed to kiss their hands. Under the Emperors, kissing hands became an essential duty, even for the great themselves." The Carthagenians, as a mark of love and sign of friendship, were in the habit of kissing their right hands each together, and then would kiss one another. Indeed, under a variety of forms the act of kissing has entered largely in most countries into the ceremonies of salutation; and, at the present day, many of the kissing customs kept up, apart from their social usage, are interesting in so far as they have been handed down by our forefathers from the distant past.

The Fruit Crop.

The following is an abstract of the fruit crops report for August, issued by Mr. Blue of the department of the Ontario Bureau of Industries:

The counties along Lake Erie comprise the best fruit-growing section of Ontario, but the reports show that the crop this year is far below an average. Although it is the bearing year for apples there will be less than a third of an average crop, and the quality is inferior. Peaches will be less than a third of a crop, in the lakeshore townships of Essex and Kent, and in Elgin and Norfolk they are confined to very narrow limits along the shore of the lake. Plums are plentiful in Welland, Haldimand and portions of Essex, and grapes are an excellent crop in all the counties. Cherries have been very deficient, both in quantity and quality. Pears will be an average crop. Apple, pear and plum trees looked very sickly in Kent throughout June and part of July, but they are making a new growth now, and are likely to recover. Orchard fruits, especially apples, are almost a complete failure in the Lake Huron counties. Pears and cherries are in some cases excepted, but peaches and plums are almost nil. Small fruits are a fair crop. The apple crop in the Georgian Bay region will not be nearly so large as was expected when the trees were in bloom. A large quantity of the young fruit has fallen off, and several of the correspondents mention a blight on apple trees which has never been known before—the leaves curling up and the general appearance of the tree becoming unhealthy. Plums are almost a total failure. Grapes are plentiful, and there is a moderate crop of pears. The dry season, however, will, in almost all cases, cause fruit to be smaller in size than usual. In the West Midland counties apples are almost a total failure, owing to a blight which killed the fruit just as it was beginning to set. The plum crop will be far below an average. A few correspondents mention that the "black knot" is proving very destructive to the plum trees. Other orchard fruits will be very light; but small fruits, generally speaking, are a fair crop. In the Lake Ontario counties the crop will be far below the average. Even in apples, which is the only fruit giving promise of anything like a fair yield, growers state that there will not be half a crop, and the quality will be inferior. The apple worm has made its appearance in almost every section, and this with the dry weather has caused more than half of the young fruit to fall from the trees. Pears are a middling crop. Plums are almost a total failure. Small fruits are tolerably abundant. From about half the townships in the St. Lawrence and Ottawa counties the reports of the apple crop are favourable, but in many sections it will be under an average. Frost and high winds have injured the fruit to a considerable extent. Plums, cherries, and small fruit are a failure. Similar reports are received from the East Midland counties. Apples will be less than half a crop.

An old citizen, returning to his home from a banquet, meets another old citizen coming from the opposite direction. "Ish thish the avenue?" asked No. 1. "How should I know? I was at the banquet myself."

A MONTANA MAN'S STORY.

A Tourist's Adventure in a Geyser's Crater and his Escape Therefrom.

A party of four persons returned yesterday from a trip to the Yellowstone National Park. Joe V. Longdon, C. E. Kantner, J. E. Montgomery, and Walter Watson are the names of the persons, and they profess they have had, with one exception, a most delightful time. They were examining the crater of a geyser about two and a half miles from the Fire Hole River. Notwithstanding it is forbidden to carry specimens away from the park, or despoil in any way the formations, these gentlemen were desirous of securing some mementoes of their trip and seeing in the crater some beautiful formations, Watson volunteered to attempt a descent and secure a piece of the beautiful colored work on the interior for each member of the party. He carefully descended a distance of probably 12 feet, taking care that each time his hold was secure. He reached the formations, secured what he desired, and attempted to ascend. Reaching overhead, he grasped a projection, and, putting his entire weight upon it, it gave way, and he was precipitated into the seemingly yawning abyss. His companions, who were watching his movements, shrieked as they saw him fall. They immediately procured a light and lowered it into the crater for as great a distance as they could with the means at their command. Nothing could be seen; but by dropping pebbles and bits of wood they discovered that at a depth of about 50 feet the crater was filled with water. In their consternation at the disappearance of their comrade they had not heard the body strike the water. They gave him up as lost, and with sad hearts left the scene. Going to the river they made camp, intending to start for Bozeman at daybreak. Next morning they made preparations to start, but were delayed by Mr. Longdon becoming suddenly sick. They then concluded to remain where they were until he should be in a condition to travel. About noon another party from the geyser basin came in sight, and seeing the camp of the gentleman at once approached.

Imagine the joy and surprise of Longdon, Kantner, and Montgomery when they saw among the new-comers their friend Watson, alive and well. They could not believe it was he until he had taken the hand of each and assured them that it was none other than he, and gave them the promised specimens from the crater of the geyser. How he escaped is best told in his own words:

"When the projection upon which I had my weight gave way, I felt that I was indeed lost. I was not wholly conscious after I commenced falling. When I struck the water, feet first, I experienced a feeling of relief. I seemed to sink thousands of feet, but of course sank but a short distance. I grasped around wildly, but nothing but the water could be felt. I was rising to the surface and knew it, and a feeling suddenly came over me that I was to be saved. How, I knew not, but still I was certain that I was not to be left in the crater. On coming to the surface I reached out and a friendly rock gave me support. I heard the shouts of my friends, but could see nothing and was unable to call out in reply. After what seemed to me ages the shouts ceased, and I realized that my friends had given me up for lost. It was just after noon when we reached the crater: I suppose it was nearly 5 o'clock when I heard what sounded like distant thunder. The noise grew more and more distinct, and the water surrounding me began to be troubled. I then realized that I was in the crater of an active geyser, and that in a short time the entire space would be filled with water. I attempted to raise myself, but could find no support for my hands which would bear my weight. The walls of the crater were rough, and while in the water I could easily keep my head out by clinging to them. Suddenly I discovered that the water was rising. This gave me the hope that I might be able to keep afloat until the surface was reached. The water continued to rise more rapidly, and I at last found myself at the point from which I had fallen. Although well-nigh exhausted, I exerted my remaining strength in climbing to the surface. This reached, I managed to crawl some distance away from the mouth of the crater, where I lost consciousness. When I recovered I was being cared for by strangers—the men who conducted me to my comrades."

Upon being questioned further Watson said that as near as he could judge the crater at the point he struck the water was about 25 feet in diameter. The water was warm, but not uncomfortably so until a few moments before he left when it began to be decidedly hot and boil more furiously. He was found by the party who rescued him about 7 o'clock in the evening.—Butte (Montana) Inter-Mountain.

How Singers Should Live.

Women singers, especially in this country, are addicted to three habits which are about equally prejudicial to them as singers. These three habits may be described as the habit of taking irregular and insufficient food, the habit of tight lacing, and the habit of eating candy. I know half a dozen bright American girls, who have really excellent prospects as singers, whose voices are already beginning to betray the fact that their owners live on "lunches" and "candy" rather than three square meals a day. It is very certain that there never will be any tone to a voice that comes from an insufficiently and irregularly nourished body. On the subject of tight lacing a book might be written with ease. Many a girl who now finds great difficulty in taking a high note might do so with comfort if she would only give herself room to breathe. In brief, it may be truly said that no teaching however able, no industry however great, in the pupil can amount to anything unless the would-be singer is content to live a good, clean, honest, healthful life, trusting to good common-sense rules of living, and plenty of fresh air rather than to common quacks and nostrums. If vocal teachers, before commencing their lessons, would take the trouble to find out how the pupil lives, and would refuse to give any instruction until the pupil was ready and willing to conform to the simplest rules of hygiene, a great many troubles, especially throat troubles, would be avoided, and the act of singing, instead of being a painful, miserable, ear torturing effort, would be easy and as pl the singer as to the listener. Th life, which the student should o just as important for the singer, public; if anything they are mo the strain is greater. It is hard to realize how very one is to the Black Sea when at Ismid how very easy it would be to establ complete water communication bet that sea and the Marmora by making of this said Sakharia river. The end of a long spur inter between it and the lake, at the foo which rises the small Sabanjeh river. however, presents no obstacle to junction of the two streams, as the canal necessary for the purpose would commenced about four miles above town. Moreover, the are not political prisoners with a decent re gard for private rights, but without excep tion sentenced criminals.

At Cape May Oscar Wilde wore his æsthetic suit with "the sweetness of a maiden;" but, being posed to his liking in a big arm chair, a waiter was asked to be good enough to bring a bottle of wine and a box of cigars. The wine was old and the cigars were as black as ink; but he smoked, drank, and chatted until midnight.

Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, cares nothing for splendor. Cetywayo, the Zulu king, is greatly delighted with England and his treatment by the government and people. "If," he said, "I could only live in a country like this, I should want for nothing more on this earth." The cattle attracted his attention, and he expressed surprise that after feeding on such soil the herds did not become so fat as to be unable to rise. "Why," said he, "did a nation so grand, a people so numerous, make war upon a man so little as the Zulu? Why did you not ask me to run away, to get out of Zululand? That would have been noble of you, and kind to me."

Corea.

It is to be noted that with every revolution or change of dynasty in China, the leaders of the defeated party usually took refuge with their followers in Corea. The Mongol stock was thus continually fortified, while the stream of Caucasic migration had ceased to flow from prehistoric times. Hence it is not surprising to find that the prevailing type is now distinctly Mongoloid. Of the 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 inhabitants of the peninsula, probably five-sixths may be described as distinguished by broad and rather flat features, high cheek-bones, slightly oblique black eyes, small nose, thin lips, black and lank hair, sparse beard, yellowish or copperish complexion. The rest, representing the original Caucasic element, are characterized by rounded or oval features, large nose, light complexion, delicate skin, chestnut or brown hair, blue eyes, full beard. Between the two extremes there naturally occur several immediate shades, all of which serve to explain the contradictory accounts of the missionaries and travellers speaking from actual observation, but generally ignorant of the original constituent elements and ethical relations of the natives. All, however, agree in describing them as taller and more robust than the Chinese and Japanese, while fully equal to them in intelligence and moral qualities. They are a simple, honest, good-natured people, very frank, laborious, and hospitable, although hitherto compelled by their exclusive laws to treat strangers with suspicion and an outward show of unfriendliness. That this unfriendliness is merely assumed through fear of the authorities is abundantly evident from Capt. Basil Hall's account of his intercourse with the natives of the islands on the west coast. Lamentation is the only musician that always, like a screech-owl, alights and sits on the roof of angry man.

"Help

There was anguish in the faces of those who bent over the little white bed, for they knew that baby May was drifting away from them, going out alone into the dark voyage where so many have been wrested from loving hands, and as they tried in vain to keep her, or even to smooth with their kind solicitude her last brief sorrows, they, too, experienced in the bitter hour of parting the pangs of death. They only hoped that she did not suffer now. The rings of golden hair lay damp and unstirred upon her white forehead; the roses were turned to lilies on her cheeks; the lovely violet eyes saw them not, but were upturned and fixed; the breath on the pale lips came and went, fluttered and seemed loath to leave its sweet prison. Oh, the awful, cruel strength of death, and the weakness, the helplessness of love! They who loved her better than life could not lift a hand to avert the destroyer; they could only watch and wait until the end should come. Her merry, ringing laugh would never again gladden their hearts; her little feet would make no more music as they ran pattering to meet them. Baby May was dying, and all the house was darkened and hushed!

Then it was as the shadows fell in denser waves about us, that she stirred ever so faintly, and our hearts gave a great bound as we thought "She is better! She will live." Yes, she knew us; her eyes moved from one face to the other, with a dim, uncer- gaze! Oh! how good God was to give her back! How we would praise and bless Him all our lives! She lifted one dainty hand—cold—almost pulseless, but better, better—we would have it so—and laid it on the rough, browned hand of the rugged man who sat nearest to her. His eyelids were red with weeping, but now a smile lighted all his bronzed face like a rainbow as he felt the gentle pressure of his little daughter's hand—the mute, imploring touch, that meant a question.

"What is it, darling?" he asked in broken tones of joy and thanksgiving.

She could not speak, and so we raised her on her pretty lace pillow, and her wee white face shone in the twilight like a fair star, or a sweet woodland flower.

She lifted her heavy eyes to his—eyes that even then had the glory and the promise of immortality in them, and reaching out her little wasted arms, said in her weary, flute-like voice:

"Help me across, papa!"

Then she was gone! We held to our breaking hearts the frail, beautiful shell, but she was far away, whither we might no follow. She had crossed the dark river, and not alone.

"Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another, the household pet.

"She crossed on her bosom her beautiful hands
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark:
We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark."

Oh, infinite Father! When we weary and disappointed ones reach out pleading hands to Thee, wilt Thou take us even as the little child, and help us across over the mountains of defeat and the valleys of humiliation into the eternal rest of Thy presence, into the green pastures and beside the still waters, into the City of the New Jerusalem, whose builder and maker is God!"—Detroit Free Press.

In a Cambridge horse-car: "Now, I don't believe in speaking against a man behind his back. It does not do any good, and frequently injures an innocent party." "It is an excellent plan to follow," returned the other. "I've always done so," continued the first, "and found it worked well, but there is Col. So-and-so, he's a sample of the other kind. He will backbite and malign his neighbors, will get a man into his confidence, and then give him away, and do all sorts of such mean, contemptible tricks that I would be ashamed of."

A Clever Trick.

The Japan Mail describes a clever trick which was being exhibited by a native juggler. The performance takes place in a small room about twenty feet wide, half being allotted to the spectators, who are admitted on the payment of the moderate fee of two cents. The "properties" consist of a deal table and a sword, etc. After the usual soul-stirring flourish on a drum and samisen, a man and woman appear from behind a screen, the man binds the woman's head in a cloth, and then she kneels down close to the table, and sideways to the spectators. The man then draws his sword makes a violent blow at the woman's head; she falls forward with arms extended and limbs twitching. He then, having first wiped the sword on a gory-looking rag takes up, apparently, the woman's head, wrapped in a cloth, and places it on the table. To all appearance it is a human head; the eyelids and features have a convulsive motion; presently the eyes open in a dreamy sort of way, and to the accompaniment of the everlasting samisen the head sings a mournful song. A curtain is interposed between the audience and the performers, and when again drawn back the woman is disclosed quietly seated alongside the man. When it is recollected that all this takes place within three feet from the spectators, and that the "properties" are of the simplest description, some idea may be formed of the wonderful excellence of the performance.

Causes of Typhoid Fever.

A severe outbreak of typhoid fever which occurred last year at Nahant, a rocky peninsula near Boston, inhabited during the summer by a small number of very rich cottage owners, was followed by an investigation, of which the results are made public in an article by Mr. F. W. Bowditch, in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. In such cases contamination of drinking-water is usually the principal cause of the spread of the disease, and the wells and cisterns which supply the houses were first examined. Water was taken from one hundred and ninety of these and analyzed. Eight of the samples were pronounced "excellent," and seventy-one others "permissible," or "good." One hundred and eleven were clased as "suspicious," "very suspicious," or "bad." About eighty cases of fever occurred, nearly all of which could be accounted for by the actual condition of the drinking water used in the houses inhabited by the patients. In a few others the filthy surroundings furnished a probable source of infection, although the water appeared pure, as, in one instance, when analysis failed to detect any serious pollution in water taken from a well situated within ten feet of one leaching cesspool and fifteen feet of another, both overflowing, and of course ready to furnish an occasional supply to the well during dry seasons or under other circumstances. One or two more were probably explained by the fact that the ice used in the household was brought from a foul pond in the vicinity; and only one seemed quite inexplicable, unless perhaps the infection might have been brought by milk contained in cans which had been rinsed in foul water. Mr. Bowditch's suspicion, that the infection was communicated in certain cases by contaminated ice, is strengthened by the fact that a very severe and fatal epedemic of typhoid fever was unquestionably caused in this way not long ago at a seashore hotel in New England; and it is worth asking whether the public authority might not be employed with advantage in exercising some sort of surveillance over the collection and sale of an article which may become, and perhaps already is, far more dangerous than the trichinous pork or immature veal against which so many precautions are taken. In one place that we know of, says the American Architect, thousands of tons of ice are annually gathered at the very edge of an extensive and well-filled cemetery, which slopes somewhat rapidly toward the water and we have seen the winter product of a little pool formed by the overflow of what was practically the drain of a cluster of squalid houses regularly sold to customers.

The Sun.

In any reference to the physical history of the sun, the stupendous magnitude of its sphere must be kept vividly present to the mind. With a diameter 109 times longer than the earth's, the solar orb looks out into space from a surface that is twelve thousand times larger than the one which the earth enjoys. The bulk of the sun is one million three hundred thousand times that of the earth. If the surface of the sun were a thin external rind, or shell, and the earth were placed in the middle of this hollow sphere, not only would the moon have space to circle in its usual orbit without ever getting outside of the solar shell, but there would be room also for a second satellite, nearly as far again as the moon, to accomplish a similar course. The weight of the sun is three hundred thousand times the weight of the earth, or, in round numbers, two thousand millions of millions of millions of millions of tons. The mean distance of the sun from the earth is now so well ascertained, through investigations which have been made in several distinct ways, that there can scarcely be in the estimate an error of 500,000 miles. The distance, at the present time gives, is 92,885,000 miles. This measure is in itself so vast, that, if any traveller were to move at the rate of four miles an hour for 10 hours a day, it would take him 6,900 years to reach the sun. Sound would traverse the interval, if there were anything in space capable of transmitting sonorous vibrations, in 14 years, and a cannon-ball sustaining its initial velocity throughout would do the same thing in nine years. A curious illustration, attributed to Prof. Mendenhall, is to the effect that an infant, with an arm long enough when stretched out from the earth to reach the sun, would die of old age before it could become conscious, through the transmission of the nervous impression from the hand to the brain, that it had burned its fingers. In order that the earth thus moving round the sun with a chasm of 93,000,000 miles of intervening space between them, may not be drawn to the sun by the preponderant attraction of its 330,000 times larger mass, it has to shoot forward in its path with a momental velocity 50 times more rapid than that of the swiftest rifle-ball. But, in the moving through 20 miles of this onward path, the earth is drawn out of a straight line by something less than the eighth part of an inch. The deviation is properly the source from which the amount of the solar attraction has been ascertained. If the earth were suddenly arrested in its onward flight, and its momentum were in that way destroyed, it would be drawn to the sun, by the irresistible force of its attraction, in four months, or in the twenty-seventh part of the time which a cannon-ball would take to complete the same journey.—The Edinburgh Review.

The Critical Period.

From the age of forty to that of sixty a man who properly regulates himself may be considered in the prime of life. His mature strength of constitution renders him almost impervious to the highest attacks of disease, and all the functions are in order. Having gone a year or two past sixty, however, he arrives at the critical period of existence; the river of death flows before him, and he remains at a standstill. But athwart this river is a viaduct, called the "Turn of Life," which, if crossed in safety, leads to the valley of "Old Age," around which the river winds, and then flows without a doubt of causeway to affect its passage. The bridge is, however, constructed of fragile materials, and it depends upon how it is trodden whether it bend or break. Gout, apoplexy, and other bad maladies are also in the vicinity to waylay the traveller and thrust him from the pass; but let him gird up his loins and provide himself with perfect composure. To quote a metaphor, the "turn of life" has a turn either to a prolonged walk or into the grave. The system and power having reached their utmost expansion now begin either to close, like flowers at sunset, or break down at once. One injudicious stimulant, a single fatal excitement, may force it beyond its strength, whilst a careful supply of props and the withdrawal of all that tends to force a plant will sustain it in its beauty and vigor until night has nearly set in.

Sole Proprietor of the Garden of Eden.

We were waiting on the platform at Kingston, Ga., for the overdue train, when a wordy war began a few feet away between two coloured men, one of them a resident of the town and the other a stranger from Rome in search of a job.

"You see, gem'len, it am jist this way," explained Moses, the Kingston man, when we asked what the trouble was. "Dis yere nigger has cum down from Rome, an' de minit he strikes de town he begins to shoot off 'bout de Garden of Eden an' purtend to know all 'bout it."

"Well, can't he talk about the Garden of Eden?"

"No sah, he can't! Dat's a subjict dat I worked up myself ober five y'ars ago, an' I claim to be de only cull'd man in Kingston dat knows anyfing 'bout it. Arter Ize dun argued an' fit an' jawed an' put my heel on de necks of de niggers in dis town who talk 'ligun Ize not gwine to hab a chap like dis one walk in heah an' tell me jist how many acres of land dar was in dat garden! Cl'ar out, you black rascal—move dem hoofs 'long down de track or I'll make you sick all ober!"

Bursting of a Ship by Swelling of a Cargo.

The Gazette Maritime et Commerciale, in its news regarding ocean disasters, relates the following curious example of the formidable power of molecular forces. The Italian ship Francesca, loaded with rice, put into port on May 11, at East London, leaking considerably. A large force of men was at once put on board to pump out the water contained in the ship and to unload her; but in spite of all the activity exerted, the bags of rice soaked in water gradually, and swelled up. Two days afterwards, on May 13, the ship was violently burst asunder by this swelling of her cargo.

OBITUARY.

It becomes our painful duty this week to chronicle the death of a highly respected farmer, in the person of Mr. Samuel Donnelley, who departed this life on Wednesday the 13th Sep., 1882, at the age of 45 years. Deceased has been in poor health during the past year. His illness developed into consumption which hastened him to a premature grave. Mr. Donnelly moved into the township of Glenelg about twenty years ago, and has since made many warm friends; has filled the office of councillor with acceptance, and also other positions of trust. He has long been a consistant and worthy member of the Presbyterian church and elder of the same. He leaves a wife and two children who, with a wide circle of friends, mourn their loss. We extend to the sorrowing family our warmest sympathies in their present affliction.

VENNOR'S WEATHER FOR SEPTEMBER.

Mr Vennor's promises the following weather for September:

There will be excessive heat again during the fore-part of September where heat was experienced during the last of August and entry of Jrly. The month enters on a Friday—an unlucky day, for "so the story goes." Stormy weather probable on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean.

Sep. 1 to 7. Foggy weather along the North Atlantic coast and Gulf of St. Lawrence, with thunder-storms and probably sultry weather over the North Atlantic. Sultry and showery up to the 6th day. Cooler change night of 6th or 7th, with possibly frosts in New York State and Quebec, Canada.

Sep. 7 to 14. Cooler and pleasant weather. Days varying from warm to sultry; evenings and nights generally cool. Favourable week in majority of sections. Cold in mountainous regions; Probably rain in Quebec and Lower Proviucies.

Sep. 14 to 21. Rather stormy and unsettled week, with frequent rainfalls. Windy weather probable in Gulf of St. Lawrence and North Atlantic. Fair seasonable weather in majority of sections. Wet in northern sections about 20 and 21. Stormy and cold weather in England and in Scotland.

Sep. 21 to 28. Temperature probably fall-like. Windy with very cool evenings and nights, probably frosty, in north and west states; stormy and wet in Gulf of St. Lawrence and on the North Atlantic coast.

Sep. 28 to 30. In all probability wet and stormy in majority of sections. Crop report less favourable than expected. Wretched weather in Maritime ports and also at Newfoundland.

RISE IN PORK.

It will be good news for farmers, perhaps, but bad news for people who have to buy their provisions, to know that pork is still on the rise; that the article is still very scarce on the Western markets; and that for the first time in the history of pork packing the mammoth concerns at the Chicago stock-yard of Fowler Bros. and Atkinson and Co., packing provision companies, are shut down through the scarcity of hogs. Over 2,500 men are out of employment in consequence. The cause is attributed to the high price of corn for the past few months, farmers selling grain instead of feeding it to their stock. There is not more than half a crop of corn this year in the West, and this will tend to still further increase the price of pork; while the scarcity of pork will cause a great demand for beef, which will be scarce for the same reason.

A copy of the first issue of the Dundalk Herald, under the new proprietor, is before us. It is a 28 column sheet printed on double demy. It is very neatly got up, with a good advertising patronage, and is independent in politics. We wish the proprietor every success.

The Presbyterian Ladies Aid Society intend holding their Bazaar on show day, Sep. 27th, at the entrance into the Agricultural grounds. There will be a variety of valuable articles offered for sale. In the evening there will be an entertainment in the Dufferin Hall, consisting of an art gallery, music, a variety of scenes, and artistic work. Doors open at 7.30. Admission 15 cents.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—Now that the holidays are over, I would like to draw attention to the length of the school vacation; six weeks being far too long. This matter should be fixed by law, and not left to the trustees, who don't care to incur the frown of the teacher. Two or more of the Artemesia teachers have been away sick for four weeks, which with six weeks vacation makes 10 weeks holiday, yet they demand full pay, and one is talking of another week's holiday and a rise in his salary ! ! !

It is said that the reports of a school in Artemesia are not reliable, and trustees should compare and examine the half-yearly reports.

A RATEPAYER.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—For the last few months I have noticed some very slanderous remarks by the Flesherton Advance on our Council, and especially on our highly esteemed Clerk, Mr. Milne. I thought to have let the matter pass without interfering, but such slanderous reiterations I can bear no longer. The cause of the dispute, it may be well to notice, is because the Advance did not get the Township printing. I understand from one of the councillors that the Advance puts in a tender, stating he will do the general printing for the Township for a certain sum. Another printer puts in a tender stating what he will do and at what prices. I would like to think as some do, that it was ignorance of the Advance that caused him to put in his tender in this way, but he is so quick in calling others crafty and wily that I cannot but think he intended to have quite a nice bill of extras when the account would be sent in, and because our Council was too sharp to be duped by him, hence the abuse he has been hurling at them since. Because the Clerk happens to be a Grit he comes heaviest on him, doubtless thinking the Conservatives of Osprey would be pleased to see a Grit slandered. But, Mr. Editor, I am proud of the Conservatives of Osprey, as they speak of it with supreme contempt. The unfounded statement made by the Advance that Mr. Milne had the promise of 15 per cent. discount on the Township printing I am happy to say is received as utterly untrue, and many I have heard speak say the Advance must have intended to make it a matter of consideration to some of the Council or he would not have thought of charging Mr. Milne with any such thing. The old adage may be very well applied in this case, "evil to him that evil thinks." The editor of the Flesherton paper seems to consider it a crime to be a Grit (of the first water) as he puts it. Does he think the people of Osprey did not know what Mr Milne was before he was placed in office, and that by a Conservative council? Did not one of the councillors lose his seat in the Council for one year because he voted against Mr. Milne as Clerk? I say such is the case. I would also say, the people of Osprey have known Mr. Milne longer than they have known the editor of the Advance (or ever wish to know him, from what I hear), and they have found him a gentleman in every particular, and as for his honesty and integrity, I venture to say not one in the Township doubts it after all the Advance has said. The people of Osprey know full well if the Council gave the contract to a higher tender than the Flesherton paper they had good reason for it, especially if the Clerk had anything to say in the matter. I will now conclude, hoping the Advance will perceive that his letters so far from changing the confidence of the people in the Clerk is only strengthening it and lowering the editor of the Advance. I am sorry I cannot consider the editor of the above paper a brother Conservative of the first water, nor of anything but dirty water.

VERITAS.

A doctor will sit down and write a prescription; time, five minutes: paper and ink, ¼ cent, and the patient pays $1, $2, $5, $10 as the case may be. A lawyer writes ten or twelve lines of advice, and gets from $10 to $20 from his client. An editor writes a column puff for a man, pays a man from 50 cents to $1 for putting it in type, prints it on several dollars' worth of paper sends it to a thousand people, and then surprises the puffed man if he makes any charge.

Local Items.

Shelburne town hall is progressing rapidly.

What has become of the Markdale Fire Brigade?

All seats are free in the Markdale English church.

There are 25 lots in Thornbury in arrears for taxes.

The Tara cemetery is a paying investment.—Leader.

Wyonch recovered wages in dispute from Hicks, Euphrasia.

A Tara cheese factory has been closed; small milk supply.

Business is a little brisker; the farmers are responsible for it.

Considerable grain has been hauled in on the Sabbath this year.

There is a prospect of Rocklyn becoming a nice little inland village.

Half the agents on the C.P.R. have to live in a hand car house, or a box car.

Thimble berries plentiful on the Indian reserves; natives making 65 cts. per pail.

The Methodist ministers of the Owen Sound district met recently in Flesherton.

Mr Cæsar's cat brought home a very large snake last Wednesday; the cat had not killed it.

A few books to hand to strangers at our churches would probably be a paying investment.

The Euphrasia councilmen fight not, neither do they squabble over the township business.

The Mirror is in error as to 30 of the nuisance cases being withdrawn; they were dismissed.

Hugh Johnston interfered in the Graham family row, but got out of it with a $2 fine.

The attention of the authorities is called to the thousands of thistles on different streets going to seed.

Moffat Bros. are fitting up a lathe in their foundry capable of turning anything up to 6 ft. in diameter.

Mr Train's new saw-mill at Meaford is making headway. It will turn out 20,000 ft. daily when completed.

The Oscar-Wilde craze has struck Meaford, Owen Sound, Tara, and our own village. This is just too, too utterly utter.

Section men get $2 00, and section foremen $2 50, on C.P.R., and don't kill themselves with work; so says E. D. Wilcox.

A lamp exploded in the Disciples' church, Collingwood, during a service and set fire to the building. Elder Shearman put it out.

A Chesley girl visited Elderslie and displayed her muscular power by throwing a man against a table and broke three of his ribs.

Mr. Vandusen, butter buyer, Tara, happened to open a tub, and discovered 5 lb. salt packed round the side so that the taster would miss it.

The Flesherton Methodists have appointed ushers to find seats for strangers in church on Sundays. Markdale religionists might follow suit with advantage.

Twelve factories were represented at Listowel cheese fair; 4400 boxes were offered, but buyers would not give enough. 600 boxes only were sold, $11\frac{1}{8}$c.

Quite a number of our local postmasters have not attended to the new regulation respecting stamping postal cards. 'Tis contrary to law to stamp cards on the letter side.

A Reward—Of one dozen 'Teaberry' to any one sending the best four line rhyme on 'Teaberry,' the remarkable little gem for the Teeth and Breath. Ask your druggist for address.

Wilcox is making over $60 per mon. on the C.P.R. He is night agent and operator at Selkirk. Some of the boys have to rough it. Conductors Munroe and Maltby are on the same section.

The Graham family, Euphrasia, have been airing their grievances in the police court. James has been fined $10 for assaulting John's wife, who was also fined 50c. for assaulting James.

The attention of the inspector is called to a hole in the sidewalk opposite the English Church. The pedestrian who unwarily puts his foot in it, is apt to use words charactised more by strength than elegance.

The safest, best and cheapest medicine in the world is Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters. Sold in large bottles at 50 cents by all druggists. Turner, Markdale. Parsons, Dundalk.

Trout season closed.

The largest livery owner in Maine uses Kendall's Spavin Cure with the best success.

Houses are said to be scarce at Flesherton.

J. R. Bend, Druggist, &c., Schomberg writes, "I have sold medicines for over twenty years, and no medicine could give better satisfaction than your Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry." This medicine is the old reliable cure for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, and all summer complaints.

Only eight prisoners in Owen Sound jail.

Thousands have used Kendall's Spavin Cure for rheumatism after all other remedies had failed, and have experienced instant relief.

The threshing machine finds the straw long and tough this year.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

Beware of Opiates and powerful astringent drugs in the treatment of Bowel Complaints they may lull the pain and check Diarrhœa, etc., but are liable to produce inflammation. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is guaranteed safe and reliable even for infants, and is a specific for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic, Acute or Chronic Diarrhœa and summer complaints generally.

There is likely to be some trouble at Chatsworth before the insurance money, re late fire, will be paid over.

The result of the election has proved a grand success, but not more so than Kendall's Spavin Cure is proved to be every day. Read advt.

The Manitoulin steam ship, which was burned to water line a few months ago, is now being thoroughly repaired in the O. S. dry dock, and when finished will be strong, if not stronger than ever.

HOW IT WORKS.

The purifying and healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry impart a healthy tone to the diseased mucous surfaces of the Stomach and Bowels. Its cooling, soothing properties counteract pain, its antiseptic properties correct canker and foul humour, and its tonic astringent nature corrects all exhaustive discharges—such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Cholera Morbus, and summer complaints generally.

The English church, Owen Sound, is lighted with Gasoline, made specially for the church. The light is a good one.

Robert A. Wilson, Dispensing Chemist, Brockville, says under date of June 5th, '82, "I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has given my customers more satisfaction than any medicine in my store for the cure of summer complaints; Diarrhoea, Dysentery, pain in the stomach, sea sickness, Piles etc., you can use my name etc.

It has been very clearly proved the past few weeks, when the farmers were busy harvesting, that Markdale is a quiet place without the agriculturist.

DYSPEPSIA.

Is the most common of all diseases, and under ordinary drug treatment the most difficult to cure, it is a chronic weakness of the stomach with indigestion. The sensitive mucous membrance coating the stomach becomes irritated, and nearly all that enters the stomach continues to add fuel to the fire. Heartburn and sour eructions, belching of wind, Nausea, headache, variable Appetite, Costive Bowels, etc., are its prominent symptoms. Burdock Blood Bitters is a positive cure for this miserable disease.

Mr. J. R. Stoney, of Flesherton, has sold out his mattress factory, and now devotes all his time to insurance.

The rebuilding of stores on the site of the late fire at Owen Sound is going ahead fast.

KIDNEY COMPLAINT.

The secretion from the Kidneys is often loaded with foreign and poisonous matter, a thick brick dust like sediment or a mucous collection forms. The Kidneys are often inflamed and congested, causing pain and weakness in the back and many distressing symptoms, Diabetis, Bright's diseases, Dropsy, and all urinary Complaints are promptly cured by that grand combination of diuretics, alterative tonics, &c., Burdock Blood Bitters.

The August cheese at Flesherton factory sold for 11cts per lb. Total sales for August $1600.00.

ROUGH SIEGE LAID TO HIM.

Mr. James O. Neville, the well known General Import and Export Agent of the Allen "Line," and General Dominion Shipping Agent, of 538 Dorchester street, Montreal, is an active member of the Shamrock Lacrosse Club. "While on a late exhibition trip to the States," said Mr. Neville to the writer, "My old foe, the rheumatism, attacked me, and gave me a rough siege. I sufferrd with the ailment all through my trip and long after my return home. I tried several remedies and found them entirely useless. Having read the indorsements of well known people who had used St. Jacobs Oil, and been cured thereby, I determined to give it a trial. Upon the first application, I saw at once it was what I required. In two weeks time I was as well as ever, and fully able to attend to my business. I have not the least suggestion of Rheumatism since. It certainly is a remarkable remedy and one that seems to me to be infallible."

On Wednesday last Mr. Geo. Lawrence's dwelling house, con. 3 S. D. R. Glenelg, was burned. The furniture was saved. It is supposed the stove pipe caused the fire. No insurance.

The Mount Forest Advocate tries to be funny over an old story somebody has cooked up for his especial benefit. It states that a Markdale man tore a dollar bill in halves to pay the 50c. admission fee to a hop at Chatsworth. Sold again! Was it not a Mount Forest man who bolted a door with his thumb?

The prescription of a skillful physician, and composed of vegetable drugs of great remedial power, Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters purify the blood, give tone and vigor to the system, cures Dyspepsia and indigestion when all other medicines fail. Have you tried it? Sold by Druggists 50c a bottle. Turner, Markdale. Parsons, Dundalk,

We want our correspondents to send in their items of news weekly. Don't say there is no news; there is news everywhere, and you'll find it if you keep your eyes open. Arrivals and departures of friends on business or pleasure; selling or trading of farms; deaths; accidents; house or barn raising; meetings of any kind; in fact any item of interest. Dry indeed is the place that cannot produce some item of news during seven days of the week. Just see how interesting a correspondence you can send us.

Mr. Wm. Ranson, of South Norwick, says; For sixteen years I suffered from Billiousness, never had any medicine do me any permanent good until recommended by our druggists. (J. Wesley Fish & Co., Otterville,) to try Dr. Carson's Stomach and Constipation Bitters, which have done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken. I would, with the utmost confidence, recommend them to all suffering from Billiousness, &c. Sold by all druggists. Turner, Markdale: Parsons, Dundalk.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

The use of Tea and Coffee.

Tea and coffee are beverages used throughout the civilized world, and their effects have been studied with no little interest. That they affect the system there can be no manner of doubt, but whether this effect is beneficial or otherwise, is the question.

The experience of those who use coffee and tea shows us that they are stimulating in their action, and that coffee is more so than tea. Both are asserted to be nutritious, which may or may not be attributed to the fact that they remove the sense of fatigue and hunger, and allay the mental unrest produced by exhaustion and anxiety. If used to excess they derange the organs of digestion and cause various annoying diseases. Functional disturbances of the nervous system are also caused by ther excessive employment, such as headache, vertigo, and confusion of the mind.

A cup of coffee after dinner facilitates digestion. Those who take a cup of coffee in the morning suffer with headache if they omit it. Coffee is a laxative, tea is an astringent. The use of either frequently produces wakefulness.

The above is what is taught in regard to the effects of tea and coffee. But the reasons for them must be looked for beneath the surface.

Tea and coffee are stimulants, and they share with other stimulants a property common in a greater or less extent to them all. Alcohol will do the same thing. Stimulants, as a rule, if taken in small doses, promote the appetite and increase the digestive power by stimulating the gastric follicles. But if used to excess derange the organs of digestion and excite functional disturbances of the nervous system. This is accounted for both chemically and physiologically. Both contain tannin. Headache, vertigo, etc., are the effects of over-stimulating the nervous system.

Tea and coffee derive their activity not only from the volatile oil which they contain, but from an important constituent known by the names of caffaine or theine. Bartholow says:

"Caffeine, in small medicinal doses, promotes appetite and increases the digestive powers. On the heart it exercises a decided stimulant action, and raises the arterial tension. As regards the cerebral effects, it may be stated that at first drowsiness occurs, but this is soon followed by wakefulness, excitement, muscula trembling, confusion of mind, etc."

It may, therefore, be seen that coffee and tea are like most other things, excellent when taken in moderation, but most unexcellent if taken to excess.

AMERICAN FABLES.

How the World Went Right Along.

A bear who had made himself believe that he had the worst luck of any animal in creation, was crawling through the woods one day when he met a Serpent, who inquired:

"Which way now, my Friend?"

"I am going to find some spot where I can retire from the World. The World has not used me right, and in revenge I will desert it."

"I wouldn't do that."

"But I will. I can no longer trust anybody. I have been cheated, lied to and misused until I have no faith left. I will now retire within myself, and if any convulsion of Nature takes place the country must not blame me for it. I have borne all that one Bear can be expected to put up with."

Bruin went his way until he found a lonely spot, and he then crawled into a hole and began listening for the Crack of Doom. It made him feel good to think that the World was turning itself bottom side up because he had absented himself from sight and search, and he was determined not to yield until after several thousand terror-stricken people had come to him with tears in their eyes.

Much to Bruin's surprise the night passed like all the other nights. No one appeared during the forenoon to plead with him, and the afternoon passed without an Earthquake or Tornado. He mementarily expected the advent of a crowd to plead him to come back to the World and have faith and confidenet, but the crowd didn't show up. After a long and hungry night Bruin began to weaken. After much argument with himself he crawled out of his den and was sneaking through the woods when he met a Hare.

"Is the World yet standing?" asked the Bear.

"Certainly, never more solid since I can remember."

"And is anyone searching for me?"

"Not that I know of."

"Every goes on just the same, eh?"

"Just the same."

"And didn't you hear I had lost all faith in human nature, and retired from the World?"

"Never heard a word of it. Tra-la, old man, I'm off."

The Bear sat down on a thistle and thought the matter over for a few minutes, and then arose and made a bee-line for his usual haunts, telling every animal he met on the way that he had been off on a fishing excursion.

Reply Post-Cards in England.

A treasury warrant appears in last night's Gazette prescribing the regulations and conditions for the use of reply post-cards within the United Kingdom, the Channel islands, and the Isle of Man. It will come into operation on the 1st of October next. The cards will bear an impressed stamp of one-half penny on each half. The address and nothing else must be written, printed, or otherwise impressed on that side of either half thereof which bears the impressed stamp. Anything (including a letter of communication in the nature of a letter) may be written, printed or otherwise impressed on that side of each half of a reply post-card which does not bear the impressed stamp. Nothing whatever must be in any manner attached to a reply post-card nor must a reply post-card after the issue thereof be cut or folded or otherwise altered, except that that half of a reply post-eard which is intended to be used for the purpose of a reply (in these regulations referred to as "the return half") may be severed from the other half thereof. If any reply post-card or the return half thereof is sent by post otherwise than in conformity with these regulations it shall be enclosed in a sealed cover and forwarded to its destination, charged on delivery with postage as an insufficiently paid letter of the same weight.—London Standard.

[illegible] Control of Feeling.

It is sometimes urged that, however responsible we may be for our deeds, we cannot be held accountable for our feelings, as they come and go unbidden. Yet, if it is true that every feeling is dependent for its continuance upon the action which it prompts, the feeling itself is at least mediately under our control. We cannot, it is true, by an effort of the will, at once expel from the heart a gust of passion; but we can deny the angry utterances that tremble on our lips. We cannot suddenly kill a selfish desire, but we can refuse to commit the unjust or unkind action that it prompts. We cannot immediately banish curiosity or a love of gossip; but we can withhold from them the food on which they thrive. In the same way, if worthy and honorable impulses are weak within us, we can strengthen them by following steadfastly that course of conduct which they suggest. We can increase our sense of justice by doing justly, our sympathetic feelings, by tender and loving acts, our good temper by self-government.

The word "honeymoon" is traceable to a Teutonic origin. Among the Teutons was a favorite drink called "metheglin." It was made of honey, and much like the present mead of European countries. The same beverage was in use among the Saxons, as well as another called "morat," which was also made of honey, but flavored with mulberries. The honeyed drinks were used in great abundance at festivals. Among the nobility the marriage was celebrated a whole lunar month, which was called a moon, during which the festive board was well supplied with the honey drink. Hence this month of festival was called "honahmoon," or honey-moon, which means a month of festival.

The Jews of the World.

The number of Jews in the world is about ten millions. Of these, upwards of three millions are in the Russian empire. In Austria there are nearly a million, and about half a million in the northern parts of Germany. The Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews has stations in England, Austria, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Persia, Russia, Turkey, the Danubian Principalities, Asia Minor, Syria, and North Africa, while in Jerusalem a special effort through the means of the Hospital to seek the welfare of Israel has been very successful.

The greatest work of the Society has been the putting into the hands of the Jews their own Scriptures, together with a Hebrew translation of the new Testament. Since 1823, 153,286 entire copies of the Old Testament, and 380,263 parts of the same, have been circulated. Since 1817, 188,468 copies of Hebrew New Testaments, and portions thereof, have been sold or distributed gratis. Of late years, the British and Foreign Bible Society have taken up the printing and circulation of the Hebrew Scriptures as a branch of their labours.

The Society supports a number of schools in its foreign stations as well as London. It has schools in Bucharest, Constantinople, Damascus, Jerusalem, Mogador, and Tunis, where a large number of Jewish children are receiving daily instruction, and in all their youthful minds the seeds of the Word is patiently being sown.

At Jerusalem there are the Girls' School, and the Institution for Jewesses. The Hospital where the Jew is made practically to understand the power of Christian love and benevolence; and the House of Industry, where the convert is put in the way of gaining his livelihood.

The most diligent search could only discover thirty-five Christian Israelites in England at the beginning of the century. Since that time more than a hundred Jews have been ordained as clergymen of the Church of England. Our missionaries estimate that there are now 2,000 Christian Israelites in London, and probably 1000 more in the English provinces. "It can be stated with confidence that in Germany there is not a town where there are not some Jews who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and this is the result of our mission, directly and indirectly." There are now nearly 5,000 Jewish Christians in Prussia. The Societies for promoting the Conversion of the Jews had made, since the comincement of the present century, some 20,000 proselytes.

A correspondent of the London Record writing from Jerusalem says: The agents of the Jewish Mission have found a large and promising field of labour amongst the hundreds of Israelites who, driven from Russia, have come to the Holy Land. Formerly, Jews came to the Holy City only to weep for its fall, to study the writings of the Rabbis, or, after passing their last years within its crumbling walls, to be buried on the slope of Olivet. On its approach to Jerusalem each little company was met by those who performed for it the ceremony of clothes-rending, in token of grief for the desolation of the sanctuary. Now the case is different, the new-comers appear to have little sympathy with their Talmud-reading brethren, many of them seem to have received a smattering of Gentile learning, some have been clerks in bankers', lawyers', or merchants' offices, others tradesmen, and as they come in numbers too large to be soon absorbed into the mass of the Jewish population, they are easier of access than their co-religionists who have been longer resident here. The Society's "Emquirers' Home" and "House of Industry" are filled with inmates, and it has been found necessary to establish a large party (some of whom are not "Enquirers") in charge of a scripture-reader in a camp outside the town, at a spot known as the "Sanitorium." Here some of them have been employed in field-labor, others in a different way. A good many come here instead of going to America or elsewhere, because they had been told that they would receive land gratis. Their hopes were disappointed, as the Turkish Government, though it permits Russian Jews to settle in its dominions, and would, it is supposed, be glad to have them in Asia Minor, seems to be frightened at the noise which "the return of the Jews to Palestine" has made, and consequently objects to the establishment in the Holy Land of a distinctly organized Jewish colony, which may in time prove the nucleus of a "regnum in regno." Private individuals, it is said, are not likely to meet with the opposition to their acquiring land which a "corporation" will, and the "Habazelth" states that many of these Russian emigrants have announced their intention of purchasing property on their own account.

The Society whose head quarters are in London, England, has a Canadian agency of which the Rev. Johnston Vicars, of Toronto, is secretary.

Questions About Ducks.

Why does a duck go into the water?
For divers reasons.
Why does it come out?
For sun-dry reasons.
Why does it go back?
To liquidate its bill.
Why does it come out again?
To make a run on the bank.—[Drummer.

Some remarkable, as well as numerous, suicides have occurred recently. Among them is that of the young Chicago reporter who killed himself because he couldn't make money enough to live in style; that of the man who killed himself because he couldn't get a wife; and another because he had five or six. A singular sucide of a young lady occurred in Indiana caused by her fear lest she should die of consumption.

A Perthshire Minister, more skilful as an angler than popular as a preacher, was once giving advice to a parishioner on the benefits of early rising, and mentioned as an instance that he had a few mornings ago composed a sermon and killed a salmon before breakfast. "In fact," says he, "with self-satisfaction, it is an occasion on which I plume myself greatly." "Aweel, sir," was the pointed reply, "I wid much raither hae had yer sammon than yer sermon."

BRIGHT THOUGHTS.

Those who have nothing else to command them in the respect of others but only their blood, cry it up at a great rate, and have their mouths perpetually full of it. They swell and vapor, and you are sure to hear of their families and relations every third word. The Girls.

Wildness is a thing which girls cannot afford. Delicacy is a thing which cannot be lost and found. No art can restore the grape its bloom. Familiarity without love, without confidence, without regard, is destructive to all that makes woman exalting and ennobling.

"This world is wide, these things are
They may be nothing, yet

Nothing? It is the first duty of woman to be a lady. Good breeding is good sense. Bad manners in a woman is immorality. Awkwardness may be ineradicable. Bashfulness is constitutional. Ignorance of etiquette is the result of circumstances. All can be condoned and do not banish men or women from the amenities of their kind. But self-possessed, unshrinking and aggressive coarseness of demeanor may be reckoned as a State's prison offence, and certainly merits that mild form of restraint called imprisonment for life. It is a shame for women to be lectured on their manners. It is a bitter shame that they need it. Women are the umpires of society. It is they to whom all mooted questions should be referred. To be a lady is more than to be a princess. To a lady, prince and peasant alike bow. Do not be restrained. Do not have impulses that need restraint. Do not wish to dance with the prince unsought; feel differently. Be sure you confer an honor. Carry yourself so loftily that men shall look up to you for reward, not at you in rebuke. The natural sentiment of men toward women is reverence. He loses a large amonnt of grace when he is obliged to account her a being to be trained in propriety. A man's idea is not wounded when a woman fails in worldly wisdom. But if in grace, in tact, in sentiment, in delicacy, in kindness, she would be found wanting, he receives an inward hurt.

A Fourth Ward lady left the baby in charge of its father one evening last week, and went out to corner the ice cream market. She was absent about an hour, and when she returned she found her husband smoking and reading, while the baby sat on the floor playing with a revolver, and surrounded by a clock, a case of razors, a pair of scissors, a lot of books, a bell, a bunch of keys, a coal scuttle, a bootjack, a fire shovel, a hand-mirror, a hammer, and a toilet bottle, while in its lap was a cake of soap, and in its little mouth a ten-cent piece and a finger-ring. The husband explained by saying that every time he saw a squall coming he pitched something to the child, and that he had exhausted all his resources just as she came home. The mother just sat the baby in an arm-chair and give it one of its thumbs to suck, which contented it until order was restored in the room.

A Well "Cured" Editor.

At No. 80 King Street East, Toronto, Ont., are the editorial rooms of the Sunday School Manual, edited by Mr. Withrow, of 240 Jarvis street, in the same city. Conversing recently with several gentlemen,—one of them the representative of the largest advertisers in the world,—Mr. Withrow remarked; "As to advertising, I consider St. Jacobs Oil the best advertised article by far. It is a splendid remedy too. Besides the many cases of rheumatism it has cured right amongst us, it has rendered me most efficient service in curing a severe soreness of the chest and an obstinate headache. It does its work satisfactorily."

Philadelphia has an exceptional opium den. It is a fine house, luxuriously furnished, and the resors of fashionable women, who pay roundly.

Who Should Suffer?

The many who daily suffer agony from corns, bunions, callous lumps, when the means of remedy can be so easily procured. Putnam's great remedy for corns is the new article, but it commands the confidence of every druggist in Canada, as all can testify that Putnam's Corn Extractor is a sure thing. The man who neglects this suggestion to try Putnam's Extractor ought to suffer. Use not "the article just as good." Flesh-destroying and dangerous substitutes are offered as a substitute for Putuam's. Of such beware.

Two-Thirds of a Bottle Cures.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I have been taking your "Favorite Prescription" for "female weakness." Before I had taken it two days I began to feel stronger. I have taken but two-thirds of a bottle and believe I am cured.

Gratefully,
MRS. H. C. LOVETT, Watseka, Ill.

We beg to intimate that every well regulated household should have a bottle of Star Cement, as it mends everything as good as new.

BRIGGS' BOTANIC BITTERS are the cheapest, and we believe the best, tonic in use. Sold in packages at 25 cents and makes one-half gallon of the finest mixture. As simple as making tea or coffee.

Ayer's Ague Cure should be in every household in regions where Fever and Ague prevail. It should be taken as a preventive by every resident and traveller in malarial districts.

Sick and bilious headache, and all derangements of stomach and bowels, cured by Dr. Pierce's "Pellets"—or anti-bilious granules. 25 cents a vial. No cheap boxes to allow waste of virtues. By druggists.

HARASSING DREAMS.—An unnatural excitement of the brain and nervous system is the direct cause of sleeplessness, as also of harassing nocturnal dreams. VEGETINE has a peculiarly soothing effect in all such cases, when just taken before going to bed.

Davy & Clark, Druggists, Renfew, writes us June 3rd. "We have sold Fowler's Extracts of Wild Strawberry for a number of years, and find nothing equal to it, for the purpose for which it is designed." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cures all forms of Bowel complaints incident to Summer and Fall.

A Paris thief, in opening the carriage doors for ladies, invariably managed to take their purses, sometimes even their bracelets and then made for the nearest police station, where he deposited them with his name, strictly according to the regulations. He lived on the momentary gratitude generated in the owners recovering their property; but at last a lady caught him, and he was given into custody.

HOUSEHOLD ACCIDENTS.

The following suggestions are not designed to induce the public to attempt the duties of the regular surgeon, but, merely to place the readers of these pages in possession of a means of treatment of the minor accidents occurring daily in the household, and which, while not dangerous in themselves, are exceedingly annoying. Burns, bruises, scalds, sprains, etc., are principal among these troublesome and annoying occurences, and demand immediate treatment with the best means at hand. In the kitchen, the dining-hall, the nursery and the sitting-room they are liable to happen, and, instead of fear and alarm at the sight of the cut or mashed finger, or bruised or burned arm, or scalded surface, a cool and quiet manner should be assumed, and after washing away the blood, (if required), the injured parts should be dressed with that most valuable remedy—ST. JACOBS OIL. Its surprisingly quick relief, its cleansing properties, its tendency to quickly remove all inflammation, and its wonderful efficacy in the above as well as in all muscular and other pains, such as rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache, headache, stiffness of the joints, etc.,—these render ST. JACOBS OIL pre-eminently the best external remedy now before the people; which claim is fully substantiated by the strongest kind of testimony from all classes of people. The value of human life is so supremely important that anything that tends to its prolongation is entitled to the highest consideration. Charles Nelson, Esq., proprietor Nelson House, Port Huron, Mich., says: "I suffered so with rheumatism that my arm withered, and physicians could not help me. I was in despair of my life, when some one advised me to try ST. JACOBS OIL. I did so, and as if by magic, I was instantly relieved, and by the continued use of the Oil entirely cured. I thank heaven for having used this wonderful remedy, for it saved my life. It also cured my wife."

Bad Blood.

The blood is the true essence of vitality, without pure blood there can be no healthy action in the system. Boils, blotches, pimples and the various humors and blemishes of the skin are only symptomatic of bad blood—that needs purifying at its fountain head, to render its tributaries pure. Burdock Blood Bitters effectually cleanse the blood from all humors, obtains a healthy action of the liver, bowels, kidneys, skin, etc, and strengthening while it regulates and purifies. (1)

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR,

For Restoring Gray Hair

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed permaturely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth; and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression, falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens; and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

WINGHAM, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone it properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure
ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1581.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins, cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Sold by all Druggists.

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY'S GENERALSHIP FULLY VINDICATED.

LONDON, Sept 13.

A correspondent telegraphs as follows from Kassasin:—At an early hour this morning the entire British forces under command of General Wolseley began the long deferred attack on Tel-el-Kebir, and before daybreak the greatest battle since the Egyptian campaign opened was raging. The Egyptians had evidently been apprised of the forward movement of the British. Though they had not time to form in a body to meet the attack several Egyptian regiments were hurried out to meet the British, but before they had fairly formed to receive the attack the English were upon them, and under a deadly fire from infantry and artillery, which was opened from all quarters, they were cut up and disorganized to such an extent that followed, and it appeared to be every man for himself in retreat towards the main body. While the rebels were in this plight the British cavalry were ordered to charge, and they rode among the fleeing Egyptians sabreing and riding them down in all directions, making terrible havoc among them. The retreat of the advanced Egyptian regiments was precipitate, and so closely followed by the British cavalry, that both got to the entrenchments in a moving fight, and the forces behind the works were rendered powerless to resist the British without shooting down their own fellows fighting backward over the works almost hand-to-hand. This placed the defenders of the works at such a disadvantage that they were practically useless, as they were at most points

The effect of the retreat of Arabi's advanced regiments, and of their close pursuit by the British cavalry and infantry, was a perfect panic and who deserted their posts and fled. As soon as the English passed in force over the works, and were fairly in possession of Tel-el-Kebir, the forces of Arabi which have been defending the place started off in full retreat. So complete had been General Wolseley's preparations that the English cavalry, which had been ordered to follow up such a retreat if it occurred, started in good pursuit keeping close to the Egyptians, and fairly decimating them as they fled. Forty guns were captured. The place was found to be far less strongly fortified than had been supposed.

THE BRITISH AT CAIRO.

Port Said advices state that the English advance guard have arrived at Cairo. All the personages of rank concerned in rebellion have made submission.

ARABI A PRISONER.

An Alexandria despatch, dated 5.20 p.m. says Arabi and Toulba Pasha arrived at Cairo last night, and are both virtually prisoners.

ARABI STONED.

The first news of the battle that reached Cairo reported a great Egyptian victory, and when subsequently it was announced that Arabi was on the way to Cairo, it was rumoured that bore with him Admiral Seymour's head. The people of Cario had never heard of General Wolseley, and imagined Admiral Seymour commanded the British. When Arabi arrived along the populace stoned him.

The funeral of the late Mr. Samuel D... which took place this afternoon, was very largely attended.

We hope our correspondents will now make a "big push" and send in their weekly budgets promptly and regularly. We do not like to miss the newsy notes of our assistants at outside points, and we hope they will put a new energy into their pencils and send us in live and pointed items pretty steadily. Send all the items that can be gathered; people like to read them and we like to get them. We will be happy to furnish envelope, paper, etc. to intending correspondents, and will send the same to all parties who will use them.

NOTES FROM OUR RAMBLING CORRESPONDENT.

This week I wended my way to the beautiful and thriving town of ORILLIA.

A ride on the Northern Ry. from Barrie is always a pleasant one. I found business brisk, and the harvest good; threshing commenced in good earnest, and the yield considered better than for the past four years.

The new station here for the Midland railway is rapidly approaching completion, and will be an ornament to the town. A dancing affair came off in the building on Monday evening, and on the same day 700 went by an excursion to the Queen City. The Queen's hotel has been leased by the government as a supplementary asylum, the existing one being too small. The asylum is a fine brick building, surrounded by nicely laid out grounds and commands a fine view of the lake. While these asylums are a credit to any country, yet it is sad to think of their necessity, and the thought of their existence ought to inspire us with thankfulness that we are clothed and in our right mind.

The man who says he is not able to pay for his local newspaper ought to go at once to the County Court, and have his wife appointed his guardian. Remember that a newspaper is worth more to a family than three months' school. The family taking a paper, live as it were in a house set upon a hill, from whose windows they can see all that is going on in the world. Do not say you are not able to pay for your paper. Say you don't like the paper. Say you would rather live in ignorance. Declare you don't want your children to learn anything. But don't say you can't pay, for that is to say you lack in true manhood, and ought to be in the poorhouse.

THE CANADA PACIFIC.

A gentleman who has been to the terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway, says that the scene at the front is the most marvellous that he had ever witnessed. More than 4000 men are at work constructing the railway, and 2000 teams are engaged hauling supplies. The line is running out into the prairie at the rate of 4 miles a day, a rate of railway construction never equalled in the world's history. Langdon, Shepperd, & Co., have contracted to lay 500 miles this season, and there is little doubt that they will accomplish their undertaking. When work is finished for the year a line of railway will have been constructed that would reach from Sarnia to Montreal. At this time of writing the line is 100 miles beyond Broadview or 230 west of Brandon. Leaving this much boomed city, whose progress is rapid and reassuring to investors, the country for 100 miles is not inviting, being much broken, and poor in quality. It is, however, largely squatted upon, and here and there the land will yield good returns. As a rule, however, this tract of country will be difficult to work, so settlers will likely push west. At Broadview the land is splendid, and this will be the first great city west of Winnipeg. All the trails meet here, and it must become a large trading station. It will be the next town put on the market, but nothing definite can be learned about when this will take place. The Syndicate asked $1,000,000 for the Qu'Appelle city site, and did not get it. Since then the Duke of Manchester's Company has secured a half-interest in all town sites, so that delay will likely occur in putting the town in the market. An agent of the new land co. out west is asking $10 an acre for the land, and is selling at that price only on condition that 300 acres out of 320 be broken within three years. Such a land policy as this will work like a charm in driving immigration across the border. When the road has been laid 46 miles further on, it will reach the Qu'Appelle country, which it will leave 14 miles to one side. The line will then pass through 50 miles of knobs, after which there is clear prairie to the foot of the Rockies. It will from this be seen that the construction of the C.P.R. is being pushed forward with a rapidity upon which the country at large and the Syndicate in particular may fairly be congratulated. The Manitoba road and the Northern Pacific have come to a good understanding, and they are now in a kind of partnership. This settles the South-Eastern railway project, for if the Northern Pacific gets into double harness with the Manitoba road, there is no other road to which the South Eastern Railway could hitch, even if it were re-chartered, and the Federal veto not imposed. It seems that Manitoba must suffer by from railway monopoly, unless the Dominion Government can compromise with the Syndicate, and expunge the monopoly clause by an increased land grant. Something must be done, and judging from a complexion of politics here, a course such as is indicated is likely to be pursued.

There is a man in one of the boarding houses in town who is so mean that he wishes the landlady to reduce the price of his board because he has had two teeth extracted.

It is reported that twenty million broom handles broken in the United States yearly, but pray tell how many heads would be broken if broom handles were made stronger.

Many a woman who would like to put down a new Brussels carpet this summer will be obliged to content with putting a new hoop on the family swill barrel.

EUGENIA.

(From our own correspondent.)

The T. G. & B. R. R'y is no longer the one-horse affair it formerly was. We got on board the 6 o'clock express on Tuesday, the 12th, and landed in Toronto in good time. Then off went the crowd to see the "lion." Here, there is every conceivable plan to induce you to spend your surplus dimes. After going the round of the Zoo, where you can see the identical whale that swallowed Jonah, as some are apt to tell you; then pass up the street where you are invited to take a throw at the genuine long lost Charley Ross. Further on there is another at the same ball game on a more extensive scale. Then pass on and see all the public buildings. On Wednesday and Thursday you can step up to Shaftsbury Hall and see Sir John, (provided you are not a Globe reporter); and lastly you can land at the Police Court and hear the "Beak" admonishing the crowd thus, "Go thy way for this time, it is Exhibition times." Then we take the night express for Markdale, on board of which we find the conductor and our old friend baggageman Chambers with their usual civility, and ready to give you all necessary information. It is pleasant to meet such on our railways. We arrive, at rather a late hour, without any serious accident.

The latest device for swindling is under cover of an advertisement, "To those just married or contemplating marriage," promising to send for one dollar, to any address, carefully sealed and secure from observation, a work which no newly married couple should be without, etc. Hundreds of letters came, each containing the letter. To each address was sent a cheap Testament, costing, with postage, about 10 cents. And it would be hard to say wherein he did not "fill the bill."

A Mr. NOECKER has asked the Drayton New Era to state, for the information of the farmers, that it would be to their own interest for them not to thresh their barley until the cold weather sets in—say the end of October or the beginning of November—unless it be of the very best grade. The reason for this is because most of the barley is discolored, and was gotten while it was yet damp, and if it should be threshed while it still retains moisture it will most assuredly heat and sprout, and thus be rendered useless, except for pig feed; whereas, if the grain is allowed to remain in the ear for a month or two it will turn out better and considerably improves in color, and thus becomes a more merchantable article. If this advice be followed, and the barns wherein the crop is gathered kept well supplied with fresh air, probably the greater part of the crop will not grade lower than No. 2.

On Saturday week, on the 2nd con. of Bruce, a new barn (the property of Mr. N. McLean, raised on cedar posts, the under part being intended for sheds, etc.,) fell over with a crash, shattering the building into pieces. Mr. McLean with three men and a team had only just drove out of the barn, where they had been unloading grain, thus barely escaping with their lives. A little two year old son of Mr. McLean was playing in a buggy under the barn at the time, but miraculously escaped without injury, the buggy body being all crushed into pieces, truly the escape of the little fellow was a miracle. There was also a mare and colt under the barn, the former was killed and the latter escaped without injury.

I heard a dull preacher
One summer day.
And I wished the poor teacher
A furlong away.

And I sat with the others,
Held in by the gloom;
While the trees were my brothers
And earth had more room.

And I heard the leaves rustle
And lisp in the air—
And I shunned the man's bustle,
I shrank from the prayer.

Alas for the preacher!
Alas for the throng!
Untaught was the teacher,
And so he went wrong!

SAMUEL W. DUFFIELD.

THE FISHERWOMAN OF HONFLEUR.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH COMMUNE.

CHAPTER III.

On quitting the bureau of the avocat, the young fisherman inadvertently wandered into the twentieth arrondissement, formerly a detached village, called Belleville, but now one of the most turbulent districts of Paris, and at that period the headquarters of Communism. He soon discovered he had strolled away from those parts of the city he wished to see; but as he wandered along, seeking to get clear of the dirty, narrow streets which opened in every direction, whichever way he turned he found himself becoming more and more involved amidst the intricacies of the poverty-stricken quarters; and still, unknown to himself, he was followed by Lucien Pierrot. It would have been difficult, probably, for Lucien to say with what special object he thus followed the young fisherman in his rambles through the city. It was perhaps chiefly that he sought to discover Antoine's motive for coming to Paris so soon after his return from sea; while at the same time he may have thought that something might occur that would enable him to gratify his long-cherished craving for vengeance. If the latter notion occupied his thoughts, the opportunity occurred sooner than he could have anticipated.

Antoine was passing through one of the longest, crookedest, and narrowest streets of this disreputable district, when he saw, a few paces in advance of him, a young lad of eighteen, who was apparently a stranger in Paris, and who seemed to be wandering about without having any particular object in view. That the young fellow was a peasant, was manifested, not only in his garb, but likewise in his gait, manner and whole appearance. He wore a blue linen blouse, belted round the waist, and a pair of clumsy sabots, which, together with his leathern gaiters, were incrusted with the dried yellow mud of the country lanes; and as he slouched along, as if he were traversing a newly ploughed field, he stared about him with a look of stupid wonder and curiosity. Suddenly, three of the small, boyish-looking soldiers of which the infantry of France seems mainly to be composed, bearing muskets and fixed bayonets that to a casual observer would appear too heavy for them to carry, pounced upon him from beneath a covered gateway, one of the party seizing him by the collar of his blouse and declaring him to be under arrest.

For a few moments the youth seemed to be stupified; then he struggled to release himself, but was instantly seized by another of the soldiers, while the third whose arm bore a corporal's stripe, told him that he had better come quietly to jail.

"Why do you arrest me? What crime have I committed?" whined the young man, as he trembled in every limb. "I have but this day arrived in Paris. I am a stranger in the city, and am innocent of wrong-doing."

"Innocent! Of course thou art innocent, mon brave," sneered the corporal. "Harmless as a lamb. Nobody is ever guilty, according to his own account—Take the fellow along, comrades!"—addressing the soldiers—"the mob is already closing up behind us."

This was true. Whence they came, it would have been hard to say; but in less than half a minute, the hitherto almost deserted street was thronging with truculent, ill-looking men, and dirty, frowsy, hard-featured females, clad in every variety of ragged costume, who appeared like so many hideous scarecrows; while still others came forth from every doorway in the narrow street. All took common cause against the soldiers, two of whom levelled their muskets, and prepared to defend themselves from the threatened attack, while the third took charge of the prisoner. Many of the men were armed with short, stout cudgels, and some of the women grasped broom-handles in their sinewy hands. The women were loud in their clamour.

"Fi donc, fi!" they cried. "Let the lad go free, mouchards, tyrans—spies that ye are!"

Perceiving that the crowd took his part, the young fellow said: "Believe me, citoyens and citoyennes, I am innocent. I have but this day arrived in Paris. My father is an honest farmer of Clermont. 'Tis the first time I have been in the city. I have come to see my brother, who is an honest artisan, and works somewhere in this quarter of Paris." There was apparent truth in the young man's looks and voice as he pleaded with the crowd.

"That is doubtless true," cried a stout burly virago, whirling a broomstick over her head, to the imminent peril of her companions. "Poltroons"—addressing the male portion of the crowd—"cowards that ye are! Have ye no spirit, that ye would let a poor lad be dragged to prison, and be shot on the ramparts to-morrow, when half-a-dozen women might set him free?"

Hearing his prophetic doom thus pronounced, the poor lad wept aloud, as he entreated the crowd to release him.

Irritated by the women's taunts, the men caught up the cry, "To the rescue!" and bore down savagely upon the soldiers, two of whom bravely kept the leaders of the mob at bay for a few moments by charging with their bayonets. But muskets and bayonets were soon wrested from them; they were struck down and brutally kicked and trampled upon, and their uniforms torn into shreds. The third soldier, however, disregarding the perilous position of his comrades, had retained the grasp of the prisoner, and, unnoticed by the mob, who were fully occupied in wreaking vengeance upon their natural foes, the military, had dragged the unfortunate youth into a by-street, and would speedily have disappeared with him, had not Antoine, who had hitherto looked on as if bewildered, but whose sympathies were with the peasant, hastened to the rescue of the young lad. Wrenching the musket and bayonet from the grasp of the soldier he struck him senseless to the ground with one blow of his fist. "Run, lad, run!" he cried. "Dost not see that thou art free? Away, away!"

The peasant, who for a few moments seemed to have become paralysed with terror, made off as fast as his legs could carry him.

The beat of a drum and the steady tramp of feet were heard near by.

"Scatter! Scatter and fly!" shouted a hoarse voice in the rear of the crowd. "Do ye not hear? The soldiers are approaching."

The mob disappeared as rapidly as they had gathered, leaving the unfortunate soldiers stretched on the ground bleeding, bruised, and senseless. In half a minute the front rank of a troop of soldiers appeared at the entrance of the street. Antoine was stooping over the soldier whom he had struck down, striving to restore him to consciousness. He knew not of the approach of the troop until the men were close upon him, when, suddenly becoming aware of his own danger, he took to flight. Some of the soldiers started in pursuit of the fugitive, while the main body hastened to the succour of their hapless comrades. Antoine, however, gained upon his pursuers, and would have escaped, but that on turning the corner of a street, he found himself confronted by another party of soldiers who were hastening to the scene of the disturbance. He stopped short and was about to take refuge in a narrow court, where he might have concealed himself till the soldiers had passed by, when Lucien Pierrot, who had never lost sight of the young fisherman, and had witnessed all that had occurred, shouted: "Seize that young man! He is a Communist, and was the leader of the mob."

In an instant, Antoine was surrounded, seized, and pitilessly dragged off to prison. There was a brief examination before a sergeant of police, in which Lucien Pierrot, who appeared as prosecutor, denounced the prisoner, Antoine Duroc, as a Communist leader of the lowest and vilest class, and swore that he had seen the prisoner strike a soldier down with his own hand and brutally maltreat him, thus effecting the release of a man under arrest.

Antoine, who declared that he was not a Communist, and that he knew not the meaning of the word, did not attempt to deny that he had struck down a soldier, and released a poor young peasant whom he believed to be innocent. This was enough; he was ordered to be confined and closely guarded until he could be brought before the military authorities the next day. The jailer, however, who was a native of Brittany, and had heard the young fisherman's simple story, believed in his innocence. He knew Lucien Pierrot as a paid government spy, and believed him capable of any falsehood or iniquity whereby he might gratify his malice against any individual who had offended him, or might pocket a reward for his vigilance in behalf of the government. He pitied the unfortunate prisoner; and Antoine, who felt the need of sympathy, spoke of his young wife, who would now be impatiently waiting for his return from Paris.

"It grieves me sorely, Monsieur," he added, "that I have no means of acquainting my poor Madeleine with the misfortune that has befallen me. She will not know what to think, and will fear that some serious accident has happened to me."

"Thou canst write to thy wife, mon ami," said the jailer. "I will post the letter."

"Monsieur, I cannot write," replied Antoine.

"Then tell me what thou would'st say, and I will write for thee."

Antoine dictated a few lines, informing Madeliene that he was in prison in Paris, having been denounced as a Communist by a government spy named Lucien Pierrot; but, anxious not to alarm his wife, he expressed the hope that he would speedily be released, and that he would be able, when taken before the court, to prove his innocence.

The jailer shook his head gravely, but made no remark; and probably Antoine himself did not feel the confidence in his speedy release that he sought to impart to his wife; though, being ignorant of the dreadful severity with which those who were suspected of Communism were punished, he doubted not that he would be set at liberty in the course of a few days at the furthest.

The letter was despatched; and was received by Madeleine at the moment when she was setting forth to meet her husband at the Honfleur railroad depot, fully expecting him to return that day.

The young wife was dreadfully alarmed on reading the letter. "It is my fault," she thought. "I am to blame. I ought not to have concealed from my husband the base conduct of the villain Lucien Pierrot. He threatened me with vengeance, and now he has accomplished his purpose. If I had told Antoine, he would have been on his guard against the wretch, and this trouble would not have occurred. But I acted as I thought, for the best." She sank into a chair, and for a few minutes felt perfectly helpless; but recollecting that it was necessary to exert herself immediately in her husband's behalf, she determined to proceed instantly to the mayor of Honfleur and seek his advice and assistance.

Monsieur le Maire was himself the owner of numerous fishing-luggers. Antoine was known to him, and was a favorite with him; and Madeleine knew that he would do all in his power to help her in her sore trouble. He read the letter, and heard from Madeleine the story of Lucien Pierrot's base conduct towards her. That Antoine had no connection with Communism, he was well aware; but he read the journals constantly, and he knew that the government, having been terribly frightened, were now proceeding with ruthless severity against all persons even suspected of complicity with Communism. That the young fisherman was guiltless of any such complicity, he could prove, if it were not already too late; but then he knew nothing of Antoine's having assaulted a soldier and released a man under arrest. Nothing of this was mentioned in the letter.

"You must hasten immediately to Paris," he said. "I know not what else to advise. I am acquainted with the sous-prefet of police—a worthy man, who will do all in his power to help you, if satisfied that your husband is innocent. But you must lose no time. I will give you a letter to Monsieur le Sous prefet. Shall you need money?" Not wishing to alarm Madeleine, the mayor said nothing to her of his own fear that it might already be too late to save her husband. He wrote the letter, and handed it to her, and having been assured that she needed no help in money, advised her to set forth immediately.

The young wife needed no urging. Anticipating the result of her interview with the mayor, she had left her babe in charge of a kind neighbor; and proceeding instantly to the railway station, she, after five tedious hours, reached Paris. A stranger, unaccustomed to the noise, bustle, and confusion of a great city, she felt for the moment bewildered and lost. But the errand she had come upon quickened her faculties and inspired her with a desperate courage. Her first idea was to visit her husband and gladden him with her presence; and inquiring her way of different persons whom she met, she soon found the prison in which Antoine was confined. But, on requesting admission, she was informed that, without a special order from a magistrate, no person was permitted, under any circumstances, to visit or have any communication whatever with a prisoner. It was terrible for her to gaze upon the stone walls of the prison, and knowing that her husband was confined within those walls, to be refused permission to see him. But waiting no time in useless lamentation, she hired a conveyance, and was driven to the abode of the sous-prefet, some little distance beyond the city. It was already late when she reached the house; but she rang the bell, and gained admittance.

Monsieur le Prefet had just dined, she was informed by a servant, and would see no person on business that evening; she must attend at the police court the next morning. But on her producing the letter from the mayor of Honfleur, the servant said that he would acquaint Monsieur with her presence.

The sous-prefet was seated at a table reading an evening journal, when the servant entered and informed his master that a young woman wished to see him on business of importance.

"At this hour!" exclaimed the prefet angrily. "I cannot be disturbed. You should have told her so. Tell her to call at my bureau to-morrow."

The servant withdrew, but presently reappeared.

"What now, sirrah?" demanded the prefet.

"Monsieur," replied the servant, "the young woman will not go away. She says she must see you on a matter of life and death, and she bade me hand you this letter."

With an exclamation of angry annoyance, the prefet glanced over the contents of the letter. "Who is this woman? What does she look like?" he asked.

"She is very young, Monsieur, and seems to be in sore trouble. She told me she had travelled a long distance."

"Well, well; show her up-stairs."

The servant again withdrew; and in a few moments returned, accompanied by Madeleine, frightened, even amidst her sorrow, at the grandeur—to her eyes—by which she was surrounded.

"Enter, Madame," said the prefet, who appeared to be surprised at the extreme youth and remarkable appearance of the young woman in her fisherwoman's garb. "Pray, be seated, Madame," he continued in a gentler tone of voice; "and please to tell me briefly and clearly the object of your visit to Paris. I learn from my friend the mayor's letter that your husband is in prison, charged with complicity with Communism. My friend writes to assure me that he can certify that your husband cannot possibly be connected with the infamous Communists."

"No; my husband knows nothing of the matter, Monsieur," said Madeleine; and then she briefly told how it happened that he had visited Paris at this time.

"Then he arrived but three days ago, young woman?" said the prefet. "His name? Ah?"—again glancing over the mayor's letter—"I see; Antoine Duroc. It strikes me," he went on, "that I have some recollection of that name." He rose, went to a writing table, and returned and reseated himself, glancing over the pages of a rough ledger or memorandum-book. As he did so, he read, as if to himself, yet loud enough for Madeleine to hear: "Antoine Duroc, fisherman, aged twenty-three years, charged with inciting a mob to attack the military, and with having himself violently assaulted a soldier and released a prisoner who was under arrest. Denounced as a dangerous Communist by Lucien Pierrot."

"This is a serious matter, young woman," said the prefet to Madeleine; "much more serious than my friend's letter lead me to anticipate. It is out of my power to interfere in the matter, even if I had the wish to do so; and I have no sympathy with the Communists, nor with individuals who incite others to offend against the laws"——

"Oh, believe me, Monsieur!" interrupted Madeleine, wringing her hands in an agony of distress; "it is false that my husband is what you call a Communist. He knows not the meaning of the word. I have heard nothing of his having assaulted a soldier and released a prisoner. He said nothing of that in his letter to me; and I do not believe it is true that he has done such a thing. But, Monsieur, this man, Lucien Pierrot, is a vile wretch, who swears the lives of innocent men away for gain, and is unworthy of credence. He has vowed vengeance against my husband and me because I refused to listen to his base importunities;" and then blushing with shame amidst her distress, she related to the prefet the story of Lucien's conduct to her previous to her marriage. While she was speaking, the daughter of the prefet, a young and pretty girl of fifteen years, entered the room, and approaching her father, said: "Dear papa, I am come to wish you good-night." Then perceiving Madeleine for the first time, she became silent, and stood gazing pitifully upon the young fisherwoman behind her father's chair.

"It is sad—very sad, my poor woman," said the prefet, when Madeleine had ended her story, "but, as I have told you, I have no power to interfere in the prisoner's behalf. Your husband is charged with a military offence. He will be tried by a court-martial to-morrow morning. I dare not bid you hope for his acquittal. Such wretches as Pierrot are necessary to the government in such times as this. His oath will be taken by the members of the court-martial in preference to that of the accused, even though they regard the accuser with contempt. The trial will be brief, and the sentence of the court-martial will be immediately carried into effect. It is quite impossible for me to say or do anything in behalf of your husband that will be of the least service to him."

"Ah, Monsieur," sighed Madeleine, "at what hour to-morrow will the trial take place?"

"At seven o'clock. It will likely be over at nine o'clock; and at noon the sentence of the court will be carried out. A great number of prisoners await their trial by court-martial to-morrow."

Madeleine, weeping bitterly, threw herself on her knees before the prefet. "Monsieur, Monsieur!" she cried, "it is terrible. Men are wolves. They have no pity. But can heaven permit such injustice? Monsieur, as you hope for mercy on the last great day, intercede for my innocent husband! Save him, Monsieur, and I will pray for you, and will teach my innocent babe to pray for you and yours so long as we may live."

"I pity you with all my heart," replied the prefet, in a tone of deep sympathy; "but again I assure you I can do nothing for you; I am powerless to help you. Paris is under martial law. The civil authorities are superseded for the time being by the military. I cannot interfere with the trial or sentence of a court-martial." He advanced towards the suppliant young wife, and held forth his hand to assist her to rise; but Madeleine, overcome by the intensity of her affliction, fainted, and sank down on the floor.

The prefet rang the bell, and when the servant appeared, bade him send some of the female domestics to the assistance of the poor woman. The women came; and Madeleine, having partially recovered consciousness, was tenderly assisted from the room. "Take care of her, poor creature," said the prefet. "Let her rest a while before she goes away: and if she will partake of it, give her some refreshment."

"Poor woman! so young and so pretty!" he soliloquised, when the servants had withdrawn with the agonised wife. "I pity her sincerely; but I cannot assist her. Any interference on my part would be worse than useless.—Pauline my love," he went on, looking round for his daughter, whom he now recollected had entered the room while the young woman was kneeling before him.

But Pauline had disappeared; she had quitted the room with the servants and their helpless, sorrowing burden.

The sous-prefet did not resume the perusal of his journal. He was a man of kindly feelings, despite the hardening influences to which he was constantly subjected through his official position; and though he had his doubts, as men in his position always have in such cases, he was inclined to believe that Antoine had been falsely and maliciously accused. Yet he felt that he could not interfere in the prisoner's behalf.

At the end of half an hour his daughter re-entered the room.

"Ah, Pauline, my darling, where hast thou been?" he cried. "Thou wert here awhile since. Why didst thou go away, my child?"

"Papa," replied the young girl, drawing near to her father, and placing her arm round his neck, "I went after that poor young fisherwoman."

"But the servants will take good care of her, my pet."

"Yes, dear papa; but I took her to my own apartment and made her tell me all her story. She dared not tell you all. She was frightened, poor thing. O papa! it is so sad—so sad! I am sure, quite sure that the poor man is innocent of the political crimes imputed to him; and I have made the poor young wife promise to come here early to-morrow. I told her you would try to do something for her. And you will—will you not, dear papa, for my sake?"

"Pauline, darling, you have done very wrong; you have encouraged the poor woman to hope for assistance that I cannot render. I am powerless in the matter, as I have told her already—even if I were sure of the man's innocence."

"Sure, papa!" exclaimed Pauline. "Can you doubt? You will not doubt to-morrow when you have heard all."

"My darling," answered the sous-prefet, "no matter how strongly I may believe in the poor man's innocence, I can do nothing for him. He will be tried by court-martial in the morning, and in a few minutes will be either acquitted or condemned. They waste no time in these cases. If he be found guilty, as is most probable, he will be shot before noon."

"Papa, you must do something," persisted the young girl. "There is always time till the last moment. You will restore the poor woman's husband to her. Think over what I have said, papa; and now, good-night;" and kissing her father, Pauline hastened from the room before the prefet could make any reply.

CHAPTER IV.

When M. le Sous-prefet entered the breakfast room early the next morning, he found his daughter and Madeleine awaiting him—the latter trembling with doubt and fear, yet kept from utter despair by the young lady's encouraging words.

"Now, Madame, tell papa everything," said Pauline. "Do not be afraid. Papa is kind and good, though he is sometimes severe with wicked people."

Thus encouraged, Madeleine told everything; and the prefet was convinced that her husband was no Communist, but was the innocent victim of a vile, unprincipled person seeking to gratify his desire for vengence. Still, he knew not how he could interfere with any good result in behalf of the unfortunate young fisherman. The court-martial was to open at seven o'clock that morning.

"In all probability," he thought, "the poor man is already condemned and sentenced. A few minutes would suffice for all."

He had ordered a police sergeant to bring him a report of the results of the court-martial, the moment it was closed.

It was now past eight o'clock, and Madeleine was just finishing her story when a servant announced the arrival of the sergeant.

The prefet quitted the room and went to the sergeant, who presented him with the report. In one hour, sixteen prisoners had been found guilty and sentenced to death! One had been acquitted; but third in the list appeared the name of Antoine Duroc, a fisherman, of Honfleur, a rabid Communist, guilty of inciting and leading a mob to attack a military guard, and rescuing a prisoner under arrest. The condemned to be shot, at noonday, in a fosse in the rear of La Roquette, a prison near the Place Voltaire.

Antoine's generous impulse which had led him to release from arrest a youth whom he believed to be innocent, brought his doom upon him. He did not attempt to deny the fact; and all he could say in extenuation of his guilt was that he believed the poor lad was innocent. The young fisherman's bold, manly appearance in marked contrast with the aspect of the miserable, ragged, dirty, and generally ill-looking prisoners who were tried at the same time, interested some of the younger officers of the court-martial in his favor. One of these young officers severely cross-questioned the witness Lucien Pierrot.

"Who and what are you?" he asked. "Can you deny the fact that you are a miserable spy, gaining your livihood by denouncing and swearing away the lives of your fellow-men?"

"I am in the pay of the government," replied Lucien. "I have done my employers good service."

"Silence!" said the President of the court-martial to the officer. "The man speaks the truth—such wretches, however we may despise them," he added sotto voce, "are necessary evils in such times as these."

The favorable notice of the younger officers availed Antoine nothing. As we have already stated, he was condemned and sentenced to death; and the report of the result of the court-martial was already in the hands of the sous-prefet, whose daughter had followed him from the apartment, and now met him re-ascending the stairs.

"Papa, you have heard bad news," she said, looking into her father's troubled face.

"It has happened as I told you it would, Pauline," replied the prefet. "A few hours hence he will be shot!"

"No, papa, no!" exclaimed the young girl, arresting her father's further progress. "How can you tell that to his poor young wife? Papa, it must not—shall not be! There is yet time. You are acquainted with Monsieur le General Beaumont, the President of the court-martial. Hasten to him, papa. Take the poor woman with you. Show Monsieur le General the mayor's letter; let the young wife tell her own story. Meanwhile, dear papa, I will pray earnestly for your success. But go at once; lose not a moment of time."

"I will go, Pauline," replied the prefet, after a few moments thought. "I will do my best; but I have faint hope of success. Monsieur le General is, as you say, a friend of mine, and a just man. But he is stern and uncompromising in the performance of what he believes to be his duty; and he is justly and terribly severe in his dealings with the Communists"——

"But the poor man is not a Communist, papa!" interposed Pauline.

"Perhaps not; but the General believes him to be one of those guilty, blood-stained wretches. If the General were to learn the nature of my errand, I do not believe he would see me. Nevertheless, I will go, and will do my utmost to save the poor man."

The prefet and his daughter re-entered the room in which Madeleine, in a dreadful state of suspense, was awaiting their return. She had feared that some ill news had arrived, and a glance at the faces of the prefet and his daughter convinced her that her fears were not groundless.

"Monsieur, you have heard bad news," she faintly gasped. "My husband—my beloved Antoine is"—— She could not give utterance to the dread word that was on her lips.

It was necessary to acquaint her with what had occurred.

"Is convicted and sentenced to death; but he may yet be saved," said the prefet. "Be calm, Madame. Do not give way to despair. Bear up bravely. Much now depends upon yourself. Have you strength and courage to accompany me immediately to Monsieur le General Beaumont, the President of the court-martial that sat this morning?"

"Monsieur, I have strength and courage to go anywhere—to do anything to save my poor innocent husband."

"Then come with me—come at once, just as you are. You shall plead your husband's cause with the General. Do not hope too much; but do not despair of obtaining your husband's pardon.

The sympathies of the prefet were now fully aroused. He ordered the horses to be put to his carriage, and bade Madeleine follow him into the courtyard. As she was leaving, she threw her arms round Pauline's neck and embraced her. "Mademoiselle, thou art an angel of goodness!" she murmured. "If I succeed—and my heart tells me that the good God will grant me success—it will be to thee, under heaven, that my Antoine will owe his life. Thou wilt restore an innocent man to his wife and babe, and wilt save his judges from imbruing their hands in innocent blood." Then she hastened after the prefet, and entered the carriage—which was already waiting in the courtyard—with him.

When John Saunders went from Kentucky to the West some forty years ago he swore that his betrothed, whom he left behind, should not see him until he became a millionaire. A few days since he balanced up his affairs in Montana, and finding himself possessed of the desired million, returned to Kentucky, looked up his old sweetheart, and the twain were made one. A CARBOLINE ROMANCE.

Respectfully Dedicated to the Bald-Headed of Both Sexes.

"My worthy friend and neighbor,
Whence comes that smile serene?"
"O, I am now thrice happy—
I've found it—CARBOLINE.

"It's just what I've been looking for,
Since I've been seventeen—
And getting balder every day
Till I got CARBOLINE.

"It's growing in right rapidly,
My head can now be seen
Like other heads in silken locks,
Thanks to my CARBOLINE.

"I know a pretty black-eyed maid,
A royal little queen,
Who'll be as much rejoiced as I
To see this CARBOLINE.

"She'll throw away her switches,
False curls and borrowed sheen,
And shake upon her shoulders plump
The wealth of CARBOLINE.

"And when our heads are covered o'er,
As once they were, I ween,
We'll noise abroad the praises
Of wondrous CARBOLINE.

"As now improved and perfected,
No oil was ere so clean,
Diseases of the skin and scalp,
Are cured by CARBOLINE.

"While kneeling at the altar,
With Father Good between,
We'll call the world to witness
A match from CARBOLINE.

"And in the happy aftertime,
When comes a change of scene,
With a little dear our hearts to cheer,
We'll call it CARBOLINE.

Black chantilly lace flounces that have been out of fashion for years are being revived for trimmings of full dress toilets of elderly ladies.

Brevity in Speech—Sweetness in Music.

Some one has said that short speeches are most impressive, and simple, sweet music the most touching. If there be anything in the idea, certainly the following from C. C. De Zouche, of De Zouche & Co., Piano and Organ Dealers, 233 St. James street, Montreal, is to the point and convincing: "St. Jacobs Oil has proved of incalulable value to me in a case of rheumatism, having given me almost instant relief." In the same strain of expressive brevity writes Mr. John Fleming, editor in chief of the Montreal Post: "I have much pleasure in stating that, from the use of St. Jacobs Oil, I find it excellent and I think it a good medicine."

Forty-seven new cases of yellow fever were reported on Tuesday, in Brownsville, Texas, and one death, that of Customs Inspector C. Malley.

Substitute for Fresh Air and Exercise.

Persons of sedentary habits, or who are employed in factories, etc., require something to assist nature, as confinement and want of exercise is sure, sooner or later, to impair the digestive powers. Then it is that nature requires a stimulant such as Briggs' Botanic or Stomach Bitters. It creates an appetite, strengthens the digestive organs, overcomes biliousness, and tones the whole system. It is brought within the reach of all, as it sells at 25 cents a package, and makes one-half a gallon of a splendid mixture, equal to what is sold in bottles at $1 for three-fourths of a pint. Directions accompanying each package. Simple as steeping tea or coffee.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs:—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's pamphlet on Consumption, send two stamps to WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

THE COUNTRYMAN IN THE Weather Signal Office.

Mr. Jeremiah Toadvine, of the rural district, brought a letter of introduction to the United States Signal Officer, and by the latter gentleman was shown the beautiful scientific instruments for measuring and determining the various changes and conditions of the weather. Pointing to the standard thermometer he explained to Mr. T. the uses of the heat gauge, whereupon Mr. T. anxiously inquired if he "hadn't nuther un to spare—sich a nice merchine to sot the weather in hayin' and harvest time." His inspection of the aerometer or wind measurer evoked the expression: "Wouldn't she be the racket to run the wind mill with." The barometer was one too many for Toadvine, and, looking queerly at the official, as if he were utterly nonplussed and bankrupt of words, said: "Friend, did you ever have the reumatis?" The abruptness of the question surprised the officer, who replied, "No—never." "What"—— Evidently recollecting himself, Mr. T. stopped on the ragged edge of the threadbare remark, and said: "I only wanted to know, for if this trap (pointing to the barometer) shows the good an' bad weather afore it's time, it would be a bully trap for people with reumatis; they could flank it every time. Up my country when folks has it they use ST. JACOBS OIL, an' it's a powerful argyment agin reumatis—it's the upper dorg in the fight every time." With thanks for the unexpected information, the official politely turned Mr. Toadvine over to the usher to show him to the street car, while he, looking over his paper, read: "Mrs. T. A. Gist, No. 1204 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: I had inflammatory rheumatism very badly. In one foot and ankle it seemed to have taken hold with the determination to stay, and the morning I obtained the ST. JACOBS OIL I could not put my foot down to the floor, even for an instant. I used it that evening for the first time, and the next morning for the second time, and that afternoon put my foot down for several minutes. On the Sunday following I could stand up and walk a few steps. On Tuesday could walk about my room and went down stairs by holding on to the banisters. Now I can walk quite well and there is very little pain left. Just think! one bottle and a half, and I am almost free from pain! It is a wonderful medicine.

W. E. Gifford, Pastor M. E. Church Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Chronic Headache.

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED

TORONTO, ONT., Nov. 25, 1879.

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ., Boston:

Sir—I have much pleasure in testifying to the virtue of your Vegetine. For years past I have suffered exceedingly from chronic headache and general debility, from which I obtained no permanent relief until I was induced, about a month since, to try the Vegetine. I am now better in health than I have been for the last four years; enjoy my food better, am much stronger, and quite free from my old enemy, the headache. Hoping that my testimony may induce others to try the same remedy, I am

Respectfully yours,
MRS. D. A. JOHNSTON,
100 Lippincott Street.

I have very great pleasure in endorsing the above statement of the benefit to my wife's health, since she commenced the use of the Vegetine.

D. A. JOHNSTON,
Late Minister of the C. M. Church.

CHEERFULLY RECOMMENDS IT.

BROCKVILLE, ONT., Mar. 24, 1880.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have taken several bottles of your Vegetine. I consider it an excellent medicine, and most cheerfully recommend it to those suffering from General Debility.

I remain yours truly,
MRS. M. A. SMITH.

OTTAWA, ONT., Mar. 8, 1880.

Dear Sir—I have much pleasure in adding my quota to the already immense volume of certificates so deservedly eulogizing Vegetine. It is as stated a purely vegetable compound, and as an invigorator, purifier of the blood, and regulator of the action of the liver, has no equal. As yet I have never known it to fail in curing any of the many diseases for which it is recommended. It is rapidly becoming a popular medicine. Those who use it once, when necessity requires, call for it again.

WHAT IS CATARRH?

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxœmea, from retention of the effeted matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back part of the mouth causing ulceration of the throat; up the eustachian tubes, causing deafness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness, usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

To effect a cure the parasite must be removed or destroyed, hence inhalants and snuffs are worthless.

Some time since a well known physician of 40 years standing, after much experimenting, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease whether standing for one year or forty years. MARKDALE, SEPT. 21st, 1882.

TORONTO, GREY, AND BRUCE MEETING.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway Company was held in the offices of the company yesterday. The report of the directors was read, which showed that the important work of changing the gauge had been successfully accomplished; also that a number of improvements had been made in the matter of grades and curves, and the road re-quipped with rolling stock, the total expenditure for which up to 30th June last had been $1,141,923. The earnings showed a large improvement since the gauge has been changed to the standard width, and for the six months ending 30th June had reached $211,412.37, being the largest gross earnings for any half-year, and making in conjunction with the previous half-year, the largest gross earnings for any single year in the history of the company, the total amount being $373,020.33. The report congratulated the shareholders on the favorable showing, which they attribute to the improvement of traffic brought about by the change of gauge, as well as to the general prosperous condition of the country. The net earnings for the past half year had been applied in paying the interest on $1,000,000 preference bonds, which amounted to $25,000, and the sum of £1,500 stg. had been appropriated towards payment of interest on the $2,000,000 issue of six per cent. bonds. The report congratulatad the bondholders and shareholders on the fact that a beginnig had at length been made towards meeting the interest on the bonded debt of the company, which had been so long unprovided for, and that the interest on the preference bonds had been paid in full. The following directors were elected for the ensuing year:—Wm. Hendrie, R. W. Elliot, Wm. Tompson, N. Kingsmill, Valancey E. Fuller, John Proctor, E. B. Osler, Wm. Ramsay, and Wm. Hope. At a subsequent meeting of the board, Mr. Wm. Hendrie was re-elected president, and Mr. Wm. Ramsay, vice-president.

BUREAU OF INDUSTRIES.

The September Report of the Bureau of Industries gives full information on the progress and completion of harvest work throughout the County of Grey and of the state in which the various crops have been garnished. Meadow and Clover acres in crop....	79,523
Meadow and Clover, tons of produce..	79,113

Returns made by correspondents, based on the threshing machine records of their several localities, show that the total produce of fall wheat in the Province is 32,352,403 bushels; of spring wheat, 9,295,793 bushels; of barley, 23,545,059 bushels; of oats, 52,997,169 bushels; and of peas, 11,428,479 bushels. These figures exceed the estimates made on the 1st of June, especially the figures of wheat and oats. More accurate data, however, will be furnished by the returns of threshers, the results of which will be given in the October Report of the Bureau.

Frightful Disaster.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER ASIA ON LAKE HURON.

ONE HUNDRED PERSONS PERISH.

ONLY TWO SURVIVORS OF THE DISASTER.

COLLINGWOOD, Sept. 17.—The following report has just reached here by the hands of Capt. John Davey, of the tug Minnehaha, sent from Parry Sound by Mr. J. C. Miller, which gives details of the loss of the steamer Asia, of the Great Northern Transit Company's line, which left here on Wednesday evening last for French River and Sault Ste Marie:—

PARRY SOUND, Sept. 17.—Captain A. M. McGregor reached here yesterday by tug from Owen Sound and reported passing the wreckage of a steamer off the Limestone islands. He picked up and brought with him a trunk, a door, and a pillow-slip marked "Steamer Asia." About 10 this morning an Indian boat reached here from Point-au-Barre, about 35 miles distant, bringing Mr. D. A. Tinkiss, of Manitowaning, and Miss Christy Ann Morrison from near Owen Sound, who are supposed to be the only two survivors of the ill-fated steamer.

A PASSENGER'S STORY.

Mr. Tinkiss makes the following statement:—"I went aboard the Asia at Owen Sound about midnight on Wednesday in company with J. H. Tinkiss and H. B. Gallagher, both of Manitowaning. The steamer was crowded, all the staterooms being full, and many passengers lying on sofas and the cabin floor. All went well until about eleven on Thursday morning, when the storm struck. I was in my berth at the time. My uncle, J. H. Tinkiss, jumped up and said the boat was doomed. Dishes and chairs were flying in every direction. We left the cabin and found difficulty in getting on deck. The boat was rolling so heavily that I got a life preserver and put it on. The boat went into the trough of the sea, and would not obey her helm. She rolled heavily for about twenty minutes, when she was STRUCK BY A HEAVY SEA AND FOUNDERED,

and went down with the engines working, at half past eleven. The Asia was making for French River, and had men, horses, and lumbermen's supplies for the shanties there. I saw three boats lowered. I was in the first boat; about eight were with me. At first more got in till the boat was overloaded and turned over twice. Parties were hanging on to my life preserver, which got displaced and I threw it off. I then left the boat and swam to the Captain's boat, which was near by, and asked Mr. John McDougall, the purser, to help me in. He said it was but little use, but gave me his hand. When I got in there was eighteen in the Captain's boat, and by that time there was a larger number in and clinging to the boat I had left. I know nothing of the third boat. Our boat rolled over, and I remember missing poor John McDougall a few minutes after he helped me in. People were hanging on to the spare and other parts of the wreckage. Our boat was full of water, and the sea was constantly breaking over us.

ONE OF THE FIRST TO DIE

on the boat was the cabin boy. He was dying and was being supported by one of the men when a wave washed him overboard. The next to go was a boat hand; he was near the gunwhale coughing badly when he jumped out. I could see him paddling round in the water for nearly a hundred yards. Our numbers were now reduced to seven five of whom died before reaching the beach, viz:—Captain Savage, who was the last to die in my arms about midnight on Thursday; Mr. John Little, of Sault Ste Marie; the mate, McDonald; and two others, names unknown. The boat finally stranded near Paint-au-Barre about daylight on Friday with Miss Morrison and myself, the

ONLY TWO SURVIVING.

I put the bodies out on the beach and pried the boat off with an oar but did not bail it out. Miss Morrison and I went down the beach in the boat to a derrick about one and a half miles distant and lay on the beach all night. About eight o'clock on Saturday morning an Indian came along and I engaged him to bring us to Parry Sound. He would not bring the bodies."

The steamer Northern Belle, of the same line, which reached here this morning, has been furnished with ice, and has left for the bodies. Miss Morrison and Mr. Tinkiss are being well cared for here, and the doctor thinks neither will suffer materially from their long exposure. There were probably about one hundred on board the Asia.

NAMES OF THE CREW.

The crew consists of the captain, J. N. Savage, first mate, John McDermid; second mate, A. McNab; wheelsmen, M. Davis and G. McKay; watchman, James Smith; deck hands, John McIlroy, James Nolan, William Stinson, C. Innes; first engineer, T. K. Bruce; second engineer, M. Windover; foremen, H. Degroat, James Lamb; steward, Stephen Carter; waiters, Isaac Bennett, A. Watt, T. Lawrence; porters, R. Walker and T Hill; ladies' maid, Mrs. Walters; cooks, Wm. Jackson and J. Jackson; purser, John McDougall.

NAMES OF PASSENGERS.

The passengers were twenty-seven or thirty shanty men, names as yet unknown; Wm. Christy, newly married, and wife, Collingwood; Wm. Clinton, B. Morrey, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wood, Cincinnati, O.; A. Bowse, Mr. Ship, Mr. Duncan and son, of Hamilton; J. Martin, Collingwood; a man named Kerr and family, of Limehouse, Ont.; W. B. Gallagher, Manitowaning; Mr. McNabb, Miss Hanbury, Owen Sound; Mr. Sproule of Cookstown, supposed to be on board. The two saved are D. C. Tinkiss and Miss Christie Morrison, who have not yet reached here from Parry Sound. Numerous telegrams have been received here for a full list of the passengers on board, but it is impossible to give it. It appears that the only list is with the purser, and he, with the passengers and crew went down in the vessel.

During the past three weeks five barns have been destroyed in the vicinity of Niagara Falls by incendiary fires. The farmers talk of organising a vigilance committee for the defence of their property.

THE BY-LAWS.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR.—Taking into consideration the ignoranse recently displayed regarding the law as it can be applied under the Health Act and the Police Act, I think it would be well if we could get copies of the Act printed in order that we may know how the law really stands. I am told that there is scarcely a house in the village where the law is not violated in some shape or form, either as to stoves, or ladders, or buckets, or unclean streets, or back premises. It is evident the powers that be are not acquainted with the law which I believe are wise and just laws, and ought to be carried out more closely than they are, or perhaps, one of these days, we will either be visited with an epidemic as in Mount Forest, and othe places, or else we will be burned out. I would like to suggest, Mr. Editor, that we get 50 or so to pay a trifle each to get the by-laws correctly printed, so that every ratepayer would know the law.

Yours, &c., W. E. G.

[In reference to the foregoing, if 50 or 60 will order a copy of the by-laws, at say 25 cts. each, we would undertake to print them. We quite agree with the desirability of having the law put in the hands of the public.—Ed.]

The first event at the Owen Sound fall races on Tuesday was the Colt Trot, and was won by "Lucy", owned by C. W. Speers, and "Chestnut Jim", owned by J. R. Trimble, respectively.

Barnett, of Kincardine, striking him on the forehead, and glancing off fell on his arm, stripping the flesh from the middle of the arm to the wrist, laying it bare to the bone. The wound was dressed by Dr. John Barnhart, who found on examination there were no bones broken, and that the wound, though painful, would not be attended with serious results.—O. S. Times

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

Fairy Stories.

"Do I believe in fairy stories?"
Darling, of course I do;
In giants so tall,
And Titania small;
I believe in them all,
Don't you?

"Was there ever any Red Riding Hood?"
Oh, yes; without a doubt.
There are wolves to-day
To lead you astray;
When they come in your way,
Look out!

"And was there ever a Cinderella,
With haughty sisters?" Why yes,
I've met with her since;
And, though proud ones may wince,
She'll marry the prince,
I guess.

KHEDIVE AND ARABI.

THE REBEL CHIEF'S SERVILITY.

The Field of Tel-el-Kebir—A Mile of Dead—Arabi Fired at—The Highlanders in Action—Another Conference.

Regarding the Egyptian loss in Wednesday's engagement no computation approaching accuracy has yet been made, but including what has been accounted for by the cavalry, it cannot be short of 2,500 to 3,000. In several places the bodies of the Egyptians were lying in heaps of 30 to 50, and they lay in dense rows where the 42nd, getting in flank, enfiladed Arabi's lines while they were holding the position against the attack in front. The dead extended for over a mile behind the position as our pursuing troops fired after the mass of fugitives. Altogether the field at Tel-el-Kebir presents a terribly ghastly sight. In many instances the wounded Arabs fired upon the English after they had passed. There were lamentable casualties on the enemy's side; even

OLD MEN AND CHILDREN WERE KILLED.

This was unavoidable, owing to the fact that the Egyptians kept up a straggling fire from the mud huts.

Sufficient tinned provisions for 2,000 men for one month were captured. Fifty guns have fallen into the hands of the British. The chief of the commissariat, a prisoner, states that rations wore issued on the day before the battle for 15,000 regular troops and 7,000 irregulars.

The Herald's correspondent writes:—A ride over the field after the battle shows that the enemy's loss was extremely heavy; indeed it is difficult to understand how so great a number of men have been killed in the battle, which lasted but a brief hour. The enemy's position consisted of lines of solid entrenchments bound together by wattles. It was four miles long from flank to flank. At intervals bastions mounted by guns protected the front, and there were successive

SERIES OF DEEP TRENCHES.

At right angles to the extreme left of their position a deep trench extends two miles to the rear, behind which is another entrenchment, forming a defence of the front line from attack on the flank towards the canal. On the right were very strong works. The natural irregularities of the ground constituted a very formidable position, which would have cost great expenditure of life had it been attacked in front. This part of the line, however, was avoided and our attacks were directed towards the flanks. All who accompanied the Highland brigade were enthusiastic at the brilliant character of their advance. Their orders were to march up to the first trench and carry it by the bayonet

WITHOUT FIRING A SHOT.

This order was literally executed. After their conduct on preceding occasions, it was expected that the Egyptians would not stop to oppose the determined rush, but hundreds remained at their posts, and were bayonetted where they stood. As soon as the trench was won, the Highlanders were assailed from the strong river line commanding the trench which had been carried, but cheering loudly they pressed forward, carrying one redoubt after another, shooting and bayonetting the foe as they ran. At one point only was the advance checked for a moment, but the first line was reinforced from behind, and with another cheer they swept on again, from before them. At some of the bastions, the resistance, although unavailing, was desperate, the Egyptians being caught as in a trap by the rapidity of the advance, defending themselves to the last. At these points the Egyptians lie dead in hundreds, while only here and there a Highlander lies stretched among them, lying face downwards, as if shot in the act of charging. Had the Egyptians fired any way accurately the losses must have been tremendous; as it is they are marvelously slight when the nature of the works carried and the number of the defenders is considered.

AND CLEARED THE ENEMY

Roubi Pasha says Arabi when the attack on Tel-el-Kebir commenced, was panic-stricken at its suddenness. Obeyd Pasha was killed in battle.

According to the correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, Arabi was seen riding by the village of Belbeis from the disaster at Tel-el-Kebir attended by only twenty horsemen. The fugitive rebel leader as he dashed past waved appealing to the natives with the cry, "Egypt is ruined." His cause is everywhere considered as hopeless.

HIS SWORD RED WITH BLOOD,

Twelve hundred prisoners and twenty-seven Egyptian officers have been marched back to Ismailia from Tel-el-Kebir. After the arrival of the Khedive at Cairo a regularly constituted court will be established for the public trial of the rebel chiefs, who will be allowed to engage council.

Arabi Pasha was taken before the Khedive. He presented a loathsome

PICTURE OF GROVELLING SERVILITY.

He swore that he was not aware he was fighting against the Khedive. The Khedive remained standing while Arabi was in his presence, and when Arabi had concluded the Khedive ordered his removal.

Egyptian doctors state that when Arabi was making off to Zagazig he was fired at by one of his own officers.

Mahmound Baroudi and Suleiman Sami, who commanded a battalion which took a leading part in the burning of Alexandria, have fled to Upper Egypt.

The engineers report Kafr-el-Dwar abandoned. They saw many skeletons there. The rebels are supposed to have gone to the Aboukir forts. The enemy's troops from Mahalla, Aboukir, and Kafr-el-Dwar will parade at the front here; those from Mahalla on Sunday, when they surrendered their arms, will be stripped of their military dress, and disbanded.

Telegrams from the Governor of Ben-hi-el-Assel to the Governor of Zagazig ordering the latter to cut the canal and flood the country have been intercepted.

The Egyptian guns at Kafr-el-Dwar were cleverly concealed. Four were as large, if not larger, than the British guns. The garrison consisted of Arabi's best troops, the Tel-el-Kebir lot being recruits of

NOT MORE THAN TWENTY DAYS' SERVICE.

The Egyptian negro troops crossed bayonets with the Highlanders and Irish regiments yesterday. The accuracy with which the Highland brigade came into line, after a seven miles march, on a moonless night, in the desert sand, guided only by stars, and stormed the entrenchments and redoubts yesterday, has never been surpassed in history.

It is quite the idea this season for a young lady to artistically decorate a little fan and present it to her best gentleman friend. This doesn't signify "There is a coolness between us," as might be supposed. It is a hint for the young man to fan the flame with more ardor.

"What is a yacht?" we inquired of a long, gaunt codder, who was lounging about the wharf. "What is a yot?" said the fisherman; "well, you gets any sort of a craft you please, and fill her up with liquor and seeygars, and get yer frens on board and have a high old time and that's a yot."

Love at the seashore: "Oh, Harold," said she, as she clung close to his arm, "how very quiet and restful the sea seems to be this evening." "Just as I would like a wife to be," was the response. "And would you, as a husband, be the quiet, restful complement of such a wife?" He thought he could, and the launch into the sea of matrimonial difficulties was thus quietly made. There's sure to be a gale however.

The Newest Rain Theory.

A correspondent of an agricultural paper starts a curious theory in regard to wet summers. He has noted that after a great battle rain has fallen in heavy showers within twenty-four hours, and he suspects that we artificially and unintentionally increase our rainfall. He goes on to say:—"If a bird's-eye view of England could be taken any Saturday afternoon or evening during our summer months, the whole coast line at intervals would appear to be dotted with puffs of smoke, the breath of the big guns our artillery volunteers practice with. Now, if taken in the aggregate, the number and weight of these guns would, I think, far exceed in these respects anything that recent battles have brought together, and though the effect is of course diminished by the guns being wide scattered, yet for the same reason the area affected is increased in an inverse ratio."

Columbus and His Sailors.

When we think how superstition, retiring from the world, still keeps its grasp upon the sailors of to-day, we can imagine how it must have ruled the ignorant seamen of Columbus. The thoughtful, lonely ways of their admiral made him only an object of terror; they yielded to him with wonderful submission, but it was the homage of fear. The terror reached its climax when they entered the vast "Sargasso Sea," a region of Gulf-weed—a tract of ocean as large as France, Humboldt says—through which they sailed. Here at last, they thought, was the home of all the monsters depicted in the charts, who might at any moment rear their distorted forms from the snaky sea-weed,

"Like demons' endlong tresses, they sailed through."

At the very best, they said, it was an inundated land (tierras anegades—probably the fabled sunken Island Atlantis, of which they had heard; whose slime, tradition said, make it impossible to explore that sea, and on whose submerged shallows they might at any time be hopelessly swamped or entangled. "Are there no graves at home," they asked each other, according to Herrera, "that we should be brought here to die?" The trade-winds, afterwards called by the friars "winds of mercy," because they aided in the discovery of the New World, were only winds of despair to the sailors. They believed that the ships were sailing down an inclined slope, and that to return would be impossible, since it blew always from home. There was little to do in the way of trimming sails, for they sailed almost on a parallel of latitude from the Canaries to the Bahamas. Their severest labor was in pumping out the leaky ships. The young adventurers remained listlessly on deck, or played the then fashionable game of primero, and heard incredulously the daily reports told by Columbus of the rate of sailing. They would have been still more incredulous had they know the truth. "They sighed and wept," Herrera says, "and every hour seemed like a year."

The same Spanish annalist compares Columbus to St. Christopher in the legend bearing the infant Christ across the stream on his shoulders; and the explorer has often being painted in that character in those days. But the weight that Columbus had to bear up was a wearisome and unworthy load. Sometimes they plotted to throw him overboard by a manœuvre (con disimulacion, Herrera says), intending to say that he fell in while star-gazing. But he according to Peter Martyr, dealt with them now by winning words, now by encouraging their hopes (blandis modo verbis, ampla spe modo). If they thought they saw land, he encouraged them to sing an anthem; when it proved to be but a cloud, he held out the hope of land to-morrow. They had sailed August 3, 1492, and when they had been out two months (October 3), he refused to beat about in search of land, though he thought they were near it, but he would press straight through to the Indies. Sometimes there came a contrary wind, and Columbus was cheered by it, for would convince his men that the wind did not always blow one way, and that by patient waiting they could yet return to Spain.

As the days went on the signs of land increased, but very slowly. When we think of the intense impatience of the passengers on an ocean steamer after they have been ten long days on the water, even though they know precisely where they are, and where they are going, and that they are driven by mechanical forces stronger than winds and waves, we can imagine something of the feelings of Columbus and his crew as the third month wore on. Still there was no sign of hope but a pelican to-day and a crab to-morrow; or a drizzling rain without wind—a combination which was supposed to indicate nearness to the land. There has scarcely been a moment in the history of the race more full of solemn consequences than that evening hour when, after finding a carved stick and a hawthorn branch, Columbus watched from the deck in the momentary expectation of some glimpse of land. The first shore light is a signal of success and triumph to sailors who cross the Atlantic every three weeks. What then was it to the patient commander who was looking for the first gleam from an unknown world?—T. W. HIGGINSON, in Harper's Magazine for October.

Health Item.

About a year ago the smallpox prevailed to some extent in Austin, and there were great apprehensions at the time of the dread disease becoming epidemic. It was during this excitement that a sad-eyed colored man entered a pawnbroker arena on Austin Avenue with a blanket under his arm, which he offered as collateral security for a temporary loan of a dollar. The contracting parties disagreed on financial issues, the pawnbroker asserting with considerable positiveness, that he was inviting financial ruin to take possession of him if he advanced more than a slick quarter on the blanket, while the negro stated if the times were not so panicky, five dollars would be no inducement for him to part with the blanket.

"Why, you are out of your mind," said the pawnbroker, running his arm through a hole in the blanket. "It was not worth three dollars when it was new."

"I know dat, boss, but I hates to part wid dat blanket on account ob de tender recolleeshuns connected with it."

"Eh?" exclaimed the alarmed pawnbroker.

A pearly drop ran down the dusky nose, and as he tried to swallow a big lump the colored man said, "Dat blanket belonged to my wife's mudder, who died yesterday wid de smallpoxes, but yer can hab it fer a quarter."

People wondered why the colored man with a blanket came out of the shop in haste, as if fired out of a cannon, but he knew why. He wanted to get a good start, so as to beat a load of buckshot, with which the pawnbroker was preparing to vaccinate him.—A. E. SWEET, in EDITOR'S DRAWER, Harper's Magazine for October.

New Parisian corsages show the fronts [of] the basque continued into long panels, wh[ich] reach nearly to the foot of the underskir[t]. This is a favorite style at present.

Straw fans brought from Tuscany are a[c]companied by a parasol of straw, and w[orn] with white muslin dresses that have yello[w] satin or brown velvet ribbon ornaments.

The flatly folded scarfs worn by gent[le]men are much used by ladies with their No[r]folk jackets and tailor-made cheviot dresse[s]. Those of foulard or pique are most liked fo[r] the present season.

White will be worn both for day and eve[n]ing dress for many weeks to come, a[nd] white dresses upon the promenade will b[e] seen until the cold days of Autumn sha[ll] render this "hueless hue" inappropriate.

In the arrangement of the coiffure, hea[vy] bangs, "Montagues," or thick rings [of] hair, are now considered "bad form" by th[e] most fashionable people, and only the ligh[t]est babyish flush of hair now shades th[e] forehead.

Ladies who have small shawls of Frenc[h] or Spanish lace can utilize them as fichus b[y] gathering them up slightly upon the should[ers] and at the back, across the waist-line and belting them in over the points, fron[t] and back.

Though the popularity of the jersey bodice seems greatly to have subsided abroad, i[t] appears to find increasing favor with Ameri[can] ladies, it being too trim, compact an[d] comfortable to be abolished for a waist o[f] fewer desirable qualities.

Half-high bodices are coming rapidly in[to] favor for evening wear. They are cu[t] away about three inches from the neck a[ll] around, and are usually worn with lace, o[r] transparent, beaded sleeves, which reach t[o] the gloves that quite cover the elbows.

The most elegant collars are of sheer line[n] in a straight band, with a pattern of drawn work near one edge and Venetian lace turn[ed] up on the other edge. When the end[s] meet in front the lace is gathered very ful[l] and tied by narrow ivory-white satin ribbo[n] that gives the effect of a lace bow.

Ribbon in velvet, moire and satin is worn in the greatest profusion on dresses an[d] mantles as sashes, flat-bows for draping scarf[s] and tunics, papillon bows scattered ove[r] flounces and puffings, and loops pendant over kiltings, peeping from amid waves o[f] lace or forming the edge to bodice and tunic.

Some of the newly-imported polonaises are made with open bodices, square or heart-shaped, or in a long V, the point reaching to the belt. The opening is usually edged with a plaited ruching, or with embroidery or applique bands of beaded work. Underneath this opening is worn a plastron of velvet or chemisette of lace.

The newest fashion in Paris—that of wearing black underclothing—has become the furore amongst the women of the highest aristocracy. The undergarments like those of the eastern odalisques, are composed usually of silk, generally of what is called foulard des Indes. From head to foot the Parisian ladies appear, when divested of the outer robe, as just emerging from an ink bath—the stockings of black silk, the slippers of black velvet, the corsets of black satin, adorned with black lace, and the petticoats of black surah, filled around the bottom with a stiff mousse of black illusion or net.

The Upas Valley Story Exploded.

Another romantic tradition has been refuted, another thrilling illusion dispelled, by Dr. Otto Kuntz's discovery that the lethal capacities of Pakaraman, the renowned Javanese Death Valley, are as utterly fabulous as the Norwegian Kraaken or Richard of Gloucester hump. It is no longer permitted to us to believe that the effects of the subtle poison given off by the "Deadly Upas Tree" have bestrewn that dismal vale with countless carcasses of savage beasts, serpents, and birds, or that a certain death awaits any foolhardy traveller attempting to cross it; for the eminent German explorer has paid Pakamaran an exhaustive visit, and reports it to be as healthy as any other part of the island. In the way of corpses he did not see so much as a dead fly within its precincts. He describes it as a small circular depression in a gorge of the Dieng mountains, about seven square meters in size, and forlorn of vegetation. It is approached by two footpaths, winding downwards from the hills by which it is surrounded. By one of these paths Dr. Kuntze entered the death valley, despite the entreaties of his guides and servants, one of whom repeatedly strove to hold him back by force, and, having traversed Pakamaran in every direction, quitted it by the other path. The natives had assured him that he would find the valley choked up by skeletons, as even the swiftest birds flying above it would drop down stone-dead, slain by its poisonous exhalations. In vain, however, did he look about for a single bone: nor could he detect the least unpleasant odor. Dr. Kuntze pronounces Pakamaran to be an imposture, the off-spring of ignorance and superstition. Unable to dispute his sentence, we are bound, not altogether without regret, to relegate the death-dealing vale to the limbo of exploded myths.—London Telegraph.

A Brigand Adventure.

[It] was about seven o'clock p.m., after Sartorio had left, that at a distance of [abou]t 200 yards from the little station of [Car]ro I perceived on the right-hand side a [gent]leman, very well dressed, standing per[fectl]y still holding with his two hands a [larg]e sheet of paper, and by his side in a [ditc]h was his horse, which was being held [by a] child. As the place where this gen[tlema]n was standing was isolated, and a long [way] from any habitation, I naturally felt [ver]y interested about him. On looking down [th]e road, I saw on the left in a deep ditch [fou]r mounted policemen ready to jump [into] the road at the first signal. On arriving [at] the station where the train stopped, but [onl]y pro forma, as no passenger either got [in] or out, I inquired of the porters employed [the]re if they had noticed anything unusual [goi]ng on near there. They all made me a sign [in] a mysterious manner, placing their finger on [th]e mouth, that I was to ask no questions and [be] silent. I soon plainly understood there was [so]me ruse going on to arrest some brigands. [A]fterwards discovered that some banditti [ha]d by a threatening letter demanded a [su]m of 70,000 lire of the unfortunate indi[vi]dual whom I had seen holding the paper. [Ju]st as I was thinking it all over, I perceived [th]ree beautiful horses further off in another [d]itch in charge of a peasant, and near them [t]wo gentlemen elegantly dressed walking to [a]nd fro in a large field of clover, smoking [t]heir cigars as quietly as if they were walk[in]g in some fashionable promenade on a [lo]vely evening. Naturally what I had just [se]en made me feel sure that I was witnessing [o]ne of those infamous and cowardly in[tr]igues so common in Sicily, and which often [o]ccur near large towns. I was not mis[t]aken. I soon discovered the intended vic[ti]m was a gentleman of immense wealth and [a] large landowner, who had received a [t]hreatening letter demanding 70,000 lure, [h]alf in gold, the rest in paper. The entire [a]mount was to be delivered at 8 p. m. [p]recisely to the person who would go to [h]im and say in Italian, "Buona sera, Set[t]anta," which means "Good evening, Seventy." He with all necessary precau[t]ion informed the police, who managed matters so well that they succeeded in ar[r]esting the peasant sent to receive the amount just as he was counting the gold. Finding himself a prisoner, surrounded by Caribineers, he made a clean breast of it by denouncing the two brigands who were quietly smoking in the field awaiting their booty. They finding their man did not return, hastily sped across the field to the nearest station, and arrived at Palermo the next morning, little suspecting they would be arrested. The next day was Saturday in Holy Week, and they were taken prisoners at their lodgings, which were kept by a tailor, who little thought who his lodgers were. His consternation on discovering the fact may be better imagined than described. In his evidence he said they were brothers, and very quiet and religious; that they had been to confession and received absolution in the morning, and that they intended the next day to go and receive the Holy Communion. On them were found fifteen images of different saints, a fine portrait of Pope Pius IX., 7000 lire in banks notes, and in a back room at their lodgings two terribly fierce dogs. These men are still undergoing the penalty of the law—well deserved.

Revenge!

Some years ago a man named Wines lived in a certain New England town, his profession being that of a school teacher. His residence was a large, old-fashioned house, upon the front door of which appeared a door plate of considerable size, bearing his name, without prefatory initials, as follows:

WINES

One day, in the course of his pedagogical duties, it became necessary to the maintenance of order that he should chastise a refractory youth, which feat he accomplished to the full conviction of the offender. Smarting with the discipline he had received, this malevolent small boy pondered upon revenge, and at length arranged a plot which he believed would result in confusion of face and bitterness of spirit to the teacher. Accordingly, the first convenient night he went to the master's house, and arranged the conspicuous plate on the front door so that it read as follows:

WINES
and other lickers

Whether the youth intended to perpetrate a pun, or was as illiterate as he was obstreperous, is unknown, but the latter opinion is said to have generally prevailed in the community which claimed the honor of his residence.—Boston Journal.

Submarine Telephones.

The officer who has conducted the recent experiments at Havre, with a view to establishing telephonic communication between vessels and the shore, has addressed an interesting report to the National Telephone Company, from which it appears that the operations have been attended with complete success. In spite of rough weather, the cables were easily laid, and various persons and offices in the town were placed in communication with a vessel anchored at nearly a mile distance from the premises of the Marie Christine Club. The conversation, it appears, was very distinctly maintained, whether by the aid of an Ader or a Cropley apparatus. Some time later, it is stated, the wind gained strength, and the vessel rolled considerably; but the voices of the parties in communication were nevertheless distinctly heard. The new application of telephony is expected to render important services to maritime commerce, since it will allow vessels arriving off a port to place themselves immediately in direct communication with their owners or agents ashore.

Steam Wheels.

A new kind of steam engine has been recently patented in Austria by Professor Wellner, of Crunn. The so-called "steam wheel" (according to the account in the Polytechnischer Journal) consists of a simple water wheel, mostly immersed in hot water in a closed vessel. Steam is admitted at the lower part, and forces the cells of the wheel upward, producing rotation. The steam fills more and more of the cells on the rising side, and at length begins to escape into the steam space above the water. Steam may either be produced directly at the lower part, or conducted to the vessel from elsewhere. The upper tube for outlet of steam may lead either into the open air or into a condenser. The mechanical work consists in the ascent of the specifically lighter steam in the heavier liquid. These steam wheels may either be used as independent motors, or in connection with ordinary steam-engines; in the latter case the escape steam of one kind of machine is utilized for the other.

What the Suez Canal Has Cost Egypt.

A correspondent writes to the Times:—At a time when the indebtedness of Egypt must interest a good many people, and when M. de Lesseps is vapouring about the canal as if the latter had been made entirely with the money of his shareholders, it may be of some interest to ask, "What has the Canal cost Egypt?" The figures are given below, and the following are a few remarks about them: 1. The sum of £16,000,000 was the calculation of a French banker in 1871, but was then considered in Alexandria not only as very moderate, but as much below the mark, because account had not been kept of the enormous extra interest—or rather discounts—paid by Ismail Pasha. The general opinion was that 20 millions would not cover the outlay. 2. Interests at 42 per cent. for three years is below the mark, as the discount at which most of the bonds negotiated through the Isthmus Canal Company were ceded was at and over 14 per cent. per annum. 3. The conversion of bonds into loan in 1873 gave the Egyptian Government certainly less than 65 per cent. the nominal figure. It was probably less than 63 per cent. 4. The interest on the loan since 1873 can, of course, be easily verified, but the 1873 loan did not clear the position, as money was taken up at 12 per cent. per annum—and more—as late as 1875 and running into 1876 and 1877. Nor is any allowance made for loss of time—for the enormous rates paid for occasional accommodation, for extravagant financing by sales of produce and storing of the same, which were the natural consequences of the embarrassment to which the Canal expenses had led. The account then stands thus, viz.:—Shares, indemnity; repurchase of land, festivities, 1869, interest thereon to the 1st of January, 1871, £16,000,000; three years' interest, 1871, 1872, 1873, at 43 per cent., £6,720,000—£22,720,000. Converted into loan in 1873, at certainly not over 65 per cent., £35,000,000; interest thereon 1874-7, four years at 7 per cent., and compound interest thereon, but say 28 per cent., £9,800,000—£44,800,000. Interest 1878, 5 per cent.; ditto, 1879, 4 per cent.; ditto, 1880, 4 per cent.; ditto, 1881, 4 per cent., with compound interest, but say 17 per cent.—£7,616,000. A very moderate estimate thus comes to 52½ millions sterling; but others—careful and well-informed people—making allowances as mentioned above, bring the cost to 70 millions. Perhaps some one will sum up the advantages, direct or indirect, of the Canal to Egypt. Would it amount to more than an increase in political importance and—the present war? Another interesting subject would be, "What Turkey has cost Egypt," say from the time of Said Pasha. If even half the probable amount could be arrived at, it would be more than enough to explain the horror with which those acquainted with Egypt view the occupation of that country by Turkish troops even for a limited period, and even if in cooperation with, and under the guidance of this country.

The Grateful Clam.

Newspapers in the west and south have of late enjoyed a monopoly of remarkable stories of snakes and other desirable specimens of natural history. That the north may not be left behind in this respect let us consider the moral teachings which are presented by the summer boarder and the fresh-water clam. Three years ago the boarder in question, while straying along the bed of a stream that had been left partially bare by excessive drought, discovered lying upon the sand, a conchiferous bivalvular mollusk—vulg. clam—which seemed to be in the last gasp from exhaustion and thirst. The kind-hearted stranger, pitying the sore strait of the unhappy bivalve, at once took it up and cast it into a deep part of the stream, and then went his way, speedily forgetting the incident. A week ago, however, as he was enjoying his vacation, and, sitting near the spot where the above-described event took place, he perceived a clam laboriously climbing out of the water and dragging itself over the sand. Arrived, with much exertion, at the feet of the amazed observer, the clam opened its shell and disclosed a pearl as large as a hazelnut, which the gentleman did not hesitate to appropriate. Thereupon the clam, smiling clear way round to its back hinge, returned to the water and disappeared with a gurgle of satisfaction. This affecting incident, besides showing that even the humblest works of creation are capable of noble emotions, teaches us the fine moral that we should always be kind to animals, in which respect it is much to be preferred to the southern and western yarns, referred to, which seem devised simply to entertain the minds of the frivolous, and convey no edifying lesson to all.—Boston Journal.

About Spectacles.

Those who are compelled to wear spectacles are often the victims of a good deal of personal ridicule nowadays; but time was when it was considered fashionable to wear them, by people who were not in the least near-sighted. In Spain they formed part of the costume of every well-bred person. This absurd use of glasses was meant to increase the gravity of the appearance, and consequently the veneration with which the wearer of them was regarded. A young monk having through the assistance of his family, caused his convent to succeed in an important lawsuit, thought himself liberally rewarded when the prior, having embraced him, said, to testify his gratitude: "Brother, put on spectacles!" The glasses of spectacles were proportioned in size to the rank of the wearer; those worn by the Spanish nobles were nearly three inches in diameter. The Marquis of Astorga, Viceroy of Naples, after having his bust sculptured in marble, particularly enjoined the artist not to forget his beautiful spectacles.

Vulgar Habits.

Asking questions private and personal is a vulgar habit; and telling your own business, which no one wants to hear, is another. Asking the cost of a present that has been made to you, loud talking in public, hard staring at table, insolent disrespect to husband, wife, sister, or brother, showing temper in trifles, and making scenes in public, showing an embarrassing amount of fondness or making love in public, covert sneers of which people can see the animus if they do not always understand the drift; persistent egotism which talks forever of itself and cannot even feign the most passing interest in another, detraction of friends and it may be of relatives, a husband telling of his unpleasantness, a wife complaining of her husband's faults, the bold assumptions of superiority and the servile confession of infinite unworthiness—all these are signs and evidences of vulgarity—vulgarity of a far worse type than that which eats its fish with a steel knife, and says "You was," and "Each of the men were."

A Human Beanstalk.

Jean Condoist has been brought to Paris as a medical curiosity from the Haute Caone. According to a medical contributor to a Parisian contemporary, this youth, aged 19, took a start on the 17th of May, 1881, being then six feet three inches high, and found one morning that he had grown an inch. Every week since then he registered himself, and on the 14th of September this human beanstalk had gained nearly five inches; he grew five inches more before the 20th of Janury, 1882, and seven more before March 15th, and he now stands 7 feet 10 inches. All this has been accompanied by great pains in the back, and he stoops considerably; but since last June it is his legs only that have grown, and his feet are already twenty-four inches long.—From the Pall Mall Gazette.

PIE.

BY A SMALL BOY.

A pie as a part of speech is a pronoun, as it stands in the place of a noun, but very objective, most always neuter, unless too old, and agrees with any person who is not sick.

They are generally round one way and very flat the other. When they are cut they assume a triangular shape, until they are eaten, and then we don't know what shape they have. They are about the only three-cornered articles of food we have—except beech-nuts.

A three-cornered piece of pie is about as convenient a thing to eat as one ever closed teeth on, and licked one's lips afterwards. That is sharp end foremost. The only trouble is you don't know when to bite it off; for the mouth naturally widens as the wedge goes in. The composition of pies is dough and something else—what that something else is or should be has never been definitely settled.

"Punkin" pie had a great run. Probably at one time they were the most popular pie afloat. It is said—and we can't doubt the veracity of the statement—that Robinson Crusoe made the first punkin pies. Don't know what he made them of, but will write and ask him. It is taken for granted that Friday made them out of cocoanuts and eel-grass, as that was quite a favorite dish with his forefathers; but they have given it up since they took to eating the missionaries.

I have seen punkin pies made out of apples that I liked very much. I remember one I saw once; it was not a very large pie, but it was got up in great style. It was made on a white plate with a blue edge. The under-crust was made of dough, and was very thin; the inwards were just lovely. They were made of what is called mincemeat and a little sugar sprinkled over it. The top or upper crust was made out of dough rope-yarn, laid across like the slats of a bed. Oh, it looked lovely. Around the edge was a hoop of dough laid partly over the edge of the plate, and about an inch on the fragmentary meat. It was ornamented around the outer part of the hoop with an impression made by pressing it all over with a set of false teeth before it was baked. It was a great appetizer, you better believe! They sacrificed it at a tea-shine, and it sold readily at four cents a triangle, cash on delivery.

There are a great many people who like pies, but seldom eat them, unless 'tis because they can't get them. I don't think the common apple pie is very hard to make; for I made one once out of cranberries, and all who tasted it said it was very nice. I tasted the most of it myself. I know one boy who was very fond of pies, in fact rather than do without them he would hook them from his mother-in-law, if he had one, but he hadn't. Anyway he was awful fond of them; he was very apt to take a bite out of one if it was in his way. One day there was a pie made on purpose for him, and put in his way, and he put it out of his own way and everybody else's. I never liked cayenne pepper since; it's too warm.

Tarts are pies' children, and I'm fond of children, that is tart children. I can eat tarts with my eyes shut, and never wink half an eye full. It is said that mince pies made out of rhubarb will give you the night-mare, but if anybody will provide the minces, I will willingly risk the mares, Once I read of a pie that had two dozen dark colored birds in it, and after it was baked and opened the birds were not dead hardly a little bit, for they began to sing melodiously. It was set before the King. History does not say whether he ate the pie or not, after the birds flew away into the next yard; but I suppose he did, if he was hungry. I would have eaten it.

A Boy on Bankruptcy.

Says the London Telegraph:—While one of the Bosnian delegates who waited on the Emperor Franz Josef at the Hofburg a few weeks ago was staying in Vienna, the owner of the hotel in which he lodged became a bankrupt. Hearing of his host's mishap, the worthy Bey sought an explanation of the term "bankruptcy," and having thoroughly mastered its meaning, proceeded on his return to his native village, to impart his information to his near relatives and close family connections. "This, O my brothers, he observed, "is the true and proper way to become a bankrupt. First you must hire a shop, then you write to rich merchants in far-distant cities, inviting them to forward their wares to you for sale and pledging yourself to pay for them within a few months. As soon as you shall have received sufficient merchandise you must sell it for cash or hide it carefully away. Then must you go to the judge and say to him, 'Beloved of Allah! I am a bankrupt. Here are five pounds: They are all I have in the world:' the judge will keep four of the five pounds and proclaim your bankruptcy; the other pound will be divided among those who supplied you with goods. Latter on you will remove to another town and begin this good and easy business over again. Thus may the passing bitterness of insolvency be converted into the abiding sweetness of a comfortable independence. Be chesm! Upon my head be it!"

Meaning of the Word "Cottage."

To most persons the word "cottage" carries merely the idea of a small house, as distinguished from a large one. But, legally, a very clearly-defined meaning attaches to the expression. In the 4 Edward I., cap. 1, a cottage is described as a house without land belonging to it. By the later statute 31 Elizabeth, cap. 7, her Majesty's lieges were forbidden to build houses unless they were surrounded by at least four acres of land; hence, properly speaking, a cottage is any small house without four acres, or without any land at all.

Trimble & Wright,

NEXT DOOR TO REVERE HOTEL, MARKDALE.

September 20th, 1882.

JUST AT THE WRONG TIME.

Mr. Robert Wilson, of the City Surveyor's office, and Sreet Commissioner of the Eastern Division for the Board of Public Works, Toronto, Ont., who is very fond of shooting says: "To lose a duck hunt is a loss for which there is no adequate recompense. This misfortune lately overtook me. The boys got together recently and made arrangements for a good hunt. At the time the arrangements were entered into I was in good health generally; but just as the shooting was to take place, my old enemy, the rheumatism, came back to stay with me awhile again, and I had to forego the pleasure. The rheumatism has been a source of great bother to me, and I have done a great deal of doctoring for it, without much good. When the last attack came on me and crippled my hands so that they were drawn up, a friend of mine recommended St. Jacob's Oil, the Great German Remedy. I tried it, I am happy to say, and the result is that I am now cured and as well as ever. St. Jacob's Oil succeeded where more than a score of other liniments and medicines had failed."

The latest in concert line is a "smoking concert." Tney had one lately in Toronto, and those who were there say it was very enjoyable. Query—Are ladies admitted? If so do they indulgein the useof the weed?

When you have got an old horse that has passed the market period, apply a bottle of Kendall's Spavin Cure and the result will be marvellous. Read advertisement.

Married men, if you want to meet your familes with a cheerful face and happy heart, drink—water. If you want to meet them in anger and trouble, with scolding and complaints, drink—whisky.

The proprietors of Kendall's Spavin Cure challenge the whole world to produce its equal as a cure for rheumatism or any other deep seated pain. It stands without a rival.

Wm. Lucas & Co, bankers, Markdale have $200,000 00 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest. Moderate charges.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

W. E. Gifford. Pastor M. E. Church, Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he tells us in a recent letter that he considers it the best family medicine now before the country for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

Business still dull; so dull that two of our merchants having nothing else to occupy their time, one day endeavoren to get two little pups to raise a row, but it wouldn't work. It was simply no show at all.—Dundalk Herald.

As a speedy cure for Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Diarhœa Cholic, Cramps, Sick Stomach, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all forms of Summer Complaints, there is no remedy more reliable than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Dealers who sell it and those who buy it are on mutual grounds in confidence of its merits.

KICKED TO DEATH.—Last Sunday two horses belonging to Mr. C. Duxberry while out in the yard commenced fighting and kicking at each other, and one of them received serious injuries from which it died on Tuesday morning.—Monitor

Travellers will find the best remedy for Sea Sickness in Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. While for Sick Stomach and diseases brought on by change of water, diet, etc., and for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Dysentery, and Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, nothing acts more in harmony with nature to effect a cure.

Last Saturday Willie Gilkinson, son of Mr. John Gilkinson, was kicked in the face by a horse while hitching up a team. He received a severe cut, but luckily not in a vital place.—Monitor.

A REMARKABLE CASE

W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, suffered from a disease of the Liver and Kidneys, that brought him so low that his life was despaired of; he lay for 10 and 13 days without an operation of the bowels; after taking one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters he was enabled to leave his bed and drive out, three bottles more completed a cure, and he says that he is now a better man than he has been for years.

The traffic returns of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway for the week ending September 2nd is $7,038.52, an increase of $1,580.07 over the corresponding week last year.

It has been remarked that the quotation, "that it is better to give than to receive," applies to medicine kicks and advice, but this rule don't apply to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Those who receive that, get a reliable and infallable remedy for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Dysentery, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all Summer Complaints of Infants and Adults.

Steel rails are being distributed along the line of the T. G. & B. R'y, from Wingham siding to Teeswater.

The fruitful season of the year is prolific with many forms of Bowel Complaints, such as Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum, &c., as a safe guard and positive cure for those distressing and often sudden and dangerous attacks nothing can surpass that old and reliable medicine Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Messrs. McClocklin and Limin, Durham, killed a lamb raised by John Davis, 2nd con., Glenelg, just three months old, which when dressed weighed 52½ pounds.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Prest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.
Hear what the Deaf say:
It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.
Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. Mr. James McCaulay, plasterer, about two miles south of here, claims that he cradled three acres of wheat in two hours and fifty minutes, bound it in four hours and thirty minutes, and drew in four acres of grain the same day.

Mr. A. Bannerman, of concession 3, Sullivan, delights in a corn stalk 10 ft. 8 inches in height, and Mr. John McKenzie is prepared to bet on a pea vine carrying 32 pods.

Mr. James Kelly, Mr. McGill's teamster, whilst on his way from Bagnor here on Monday of last week during the thunder storm received a partial stroke of lightning, which for a time rendered him insensible. When he came to he found the horses on a gallop and one of them covered on the side with mud, no doubt having been knocked down by the flash.

From a great number of inquiries it appears that spring wheat in this section is so badly rusted and blighted as to be almost a total failure.

RE-OPENED.—Very successful meetings were held at the re-opening of the Baptist Church, North Glenelg, which took place a short time ago. The Rev. Mr. Dunlop, of Durham, preached in the morning, Rev. Mr. Fraser in the afternoon, and Mr. Boyle, Student of Knox College, in the evening. The church was filled on each occasion, and about $25 taken up at the collections. We believe arrangements are being made to secure regular services now that the church has been made comfortable.

A party, among whom was Mr. Dundas, of this village, in making a search for lost bodies by the late disaster, found the body of Mr. A. Duncan, Mr. Dundas' employer. In his pockets were found two tickets for the "Asia," a gold watch, a ring with the name A. Duncan enscribed on it, a small memorandum book containing his name, two coins, a commercial traveller's ticket, and $53 in bills. The body was in an advanced state of decomposition, so much so that it could not be recognized by the features. It was packed in ice and brought home.

From the London Times.

Great England put her armour by, and stretch'd
Her stately limbs to slumber in the sun.
The nations, seeing then how long she slept,
Commun'd together, and in whispers said:
"Lo! She is old and tired; let us steal
The crown from off her brows. She will not know!"
And Goneril and Regan, over the seas,
Mocking her, cried: "Her time is past. Her blood
Is sluggish, and her rusted sword from out
Her scabbard she will draw no more! And so
Thus gibing, flung with cruel hands the seeds
Of discord and of hate amidst her sons.
But from the East there came a blast too loud,
As from the West there came a taunt too much,
And she, awaking, rais'd her head, and saw
Around her all her faithless friends, and all
Her sisters and her children jeering her,
And crying, "She is old!" and meting out
Her lands among themselves, and parcelling
Her honor. Then, swift as lightning flashes
From the blue skies, her glance of scorn fell on them,
And they crouch'd, like wolves that are o'ermastered.
England stretch'd out her hand, and touch'd the world—
England arose, and spake, and calmly said:
"Nay! I am mistress still."

OUIDA.

THE FISHERWOMAN OF HONFLEUR.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH COMMUNE.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

At the moment of the prefet's arrival with Madeleine, the General was seated at a table in his bureau which was strewn with documents. A commissionaire entered the room. "For Monsieur le General!" he said, presenting a long folded paper.

The General glanced at the document. "It is well, You may go, There is no answer needed," he said to the commissionaire. Then addressing his secretary, who was writing at a table near by, he said: "The Government is determined to keep us busy, Lagrange. Seventeen fresh arrests of Communists this morning," reading from the document.

The commissionaire reappeared.

"Well, sir, what now?" said the General.

"Monsieur le Sous-prefet wishes to see your Excellency."

"Monsieur le Sous-prefet! Show him up instantly. Was there need to annouce his visit?"

"Some fresh intelligence, I presume," he went on, addressing the secretary, as the sous-prefet, closely followed by the shrinking, trembling Madeleine, entered the office.

"I hope Monsieur le General, I do not intrude, in visiting you at so early an hour?" said the prefet.

"Intrude! My good friend you are welcome at all hours!" replied the General. "Pray, be seated. I was just saying to Lagrange, when you were announced, that the Government is determined to keep us busy. Seventeen fresh arrests this morning in my department: and sixteen scoundrels, whom we tried this morning, will be sent on their long last journey to-day at noon. We make quick work of it! The emissaries of the government—call them spies, traitors, what you will—are active. They are a pack of mean, contemptible rascals, no doubt. But at such times as the present they are a necessary evil. One Lucien Pierrot—the best bloodhound of the pack, and as base a villain, I believe, as ever drew breath—has alone denounced sixty Communists! 'Twould not be amiss, when the work is done, to send the fellow to Hades, to keep company with the wretches he has hunted to death. But he is an active, useful scoundrel withal—— Ha, ha! Whom have we here!"—catching sight of Madeleine, who had crouched down behind the sous-prefet—"A fair follower of yours, eh? But do not tremble, little one. We are ne er harsh with the fair sex."

Madeleine shuddered, and her heart sank in her bosom. It seemed to her as if she heard her husband's doom pronounced in the harsh voice of the General, who could jest while he spoke of shedding the blood even of misguided and evil-minded men.

"Monsieur le Gener l," said the sous-prefet, "this poor woman is the unhappy young wife of the Honfleur fisherman Antoine Duroc, who was among the prisoners tried by court-martial this morning and sentenced to be shot. Monsieur, there is every reason to believe that the poor man is innocent, and that he is the victim of the wretched spy, Lucien Pierrot, of whom you spoke just now——"

Instantly the bearing of the Gene al underwent a change. "Antoine Duroc!" he exclaimed, interrupting the prefet, in a stern tone of voice. "Ha! I recollect the man; a fine-looking, intelligent, determined young fellow—one of those men who gain influence over the ignorant, poverty-stricken wretches who comprise the great majority of the Communists, and urge them to pillage and murder, and finally to their own destruction. I am amazed, Monsieur, to hear you, of all men, raise a voice in behalf of a condemned Communist—you, whose official position must have taught you that the greatest criminals are, as a rule, loudest in their protestations of innocence. The man Duroc, however, confessed his guilt, and even appeared to feel proud of the part he had taken in freeing a suspected man from arrest. It is such men as Duroc that are most to be feared, and who are most deserving of punishment.

"Monsieur le General," replied the prefet, "Duroc's confession—of which I have heard—goes far, in my opinion, to prove his innocence of the other charges preferred against him. The poor fellow believed the prisoner under arrest—a mere lad—to be innocent; and actuated by the generous impulse of the moment, he set the prisoner free. The assertion that Duroc is a Communist is certainly untrue. The young man, who was never in Paris until a day or two ago, does not know the meaning of the term, and has never troubled his head about any political questions. This fact I can prove by means of a letter from Monsieur le Maire of Honfleur, who has known the honest young fisherman from his boyhood. If you, Monsieur, will read the letter I have received, and will hearken to the story of Duroc's heart-broken young wife"——

"I will read nothing—hearken to nothing, Monsieur," interrupted the General, who had listened with angry impatience to the speech of the prefet. "The man has been proved guilty; he is a dangerous fellow. I cannot reconsider his case. Besides, even if he had been wrongly sentenced, which I do not believe, there is no time to make further inquiry into the matter. It is now ten o'clock. At noon, two hours hence, the sentence of the court-martial, will be carried out——"

A wild cry of anguish from Madeleine, who gave way to despair on hearing her husband's doom thus carelessly alluded to, interrupted the remarks of the General. She would have sunk down to the floor had not the prefet supported her in his arms. But instantly recovering from the faintness that was stealing over her, she threw herself on her knees before the stern arbiter of her husband's fate, and tearfully entreated him to listen to her story.

"Rise, rise, young woman," said the General, though with less sternness in his voice. "It is useless to kneel to me. I cannot hearken to such appeals. Were I to hearken to one, I must hearken to others. Besides, as I have told you, it is too late to interfere with a sentence which I believe to have been justly pronounced." He attempted to assist the weeping young woman to her feet; but heedless of this attempt, Madeleine still kneeling, proceeded to tell the story of the cruel threats and persecutions of Lucien Pierrot; and the General, in spite of himself, was compelled to listen to the tale. She told how it happened that her husband had come to Paris only a few days after his return from a long voyage; that, having heard of the troubles in Paris, she had dreaded some evil would befall him, and had urged him to return as soon as possible, ending by declaring, in words which her earnest and passionate love made eloquent, that the simple-hearted fisherman was incapable of intentional-wrong doing.

The stern General, who listened impatiently at first, gradually became interested in the weeping wife's story, until at length he began to think that the young fisherman might after all possibly be innocent. He read the mayor's letter, which he had hitherto declined to notice, and became more evidently convinced that Madeleine had told the truth, and that her husband was the victim of Lucien Pierrot's designs.

"Rise, young woman," he said in a gentle voice, as he assisted the weeping girl to her feet. "I——"

There was a stir outside the office, and the next moment, a commissionaire, breathless with haste, entered the room. "Pardon, Monsieur le General," gasped the commissionaire, as he handed to the General an official-looking document. "I bring a letter of utmost importance from Monsieur le Docteur Veron, Medecin en Chef at the Hospital Beaujou."

The General opened the letter, glanced over it, and then read aloud as follows:

MONSIEUR LE GENERAL BEAUMONT—I have to acquaint your Excellency that Lucien Pierrot, the denouncer and the chief witness against the fisherman Antoine Duroc, who was tried by court-martial this morning, was assassinated by some person, whose friend he had hunted to his doom, almost immediately after he quitted the court. He lived only a few minutes; but during that interval he he confessed that, actuated by a craving for revenge, he had sworn falsely against the man Duroc, whom he now declared to be innocent of all the charges preferred against him, save that of rescuing a prisoner whom he belived to be innocent. The spy—pity that the government is compelled to employ such wretches—died in great agony, entreating with his last breath that his confession should be instantly conveyed to Monsieur the President of the court-martial.

(Signed),

HENRI VERON, HOPITAL BEAUJOU.

"Thank heaven! My husband's innocence is proved!" exclaimed Madeleine, upraising her clasped hands.

"Save that he rescued from arrest a suspected criminal, Madame," said the General. "But I believe that your husband acted in that instant under an impulse of the moment. Yet, I know not how to act. His pardon must be granted by government, and there is no time to make the necessary application. At all events, I will take it upon myself to stay your husbend's execution, and will take the necessary steps to have the pardon ratified afterwards. But I fear it is even now too late. The prison of La Roquette is far distant; it is now past ten o'clock, and at noon the sentence of the court-martial will be carried out."

CHAPTER, V.

"O, Monsieur, in mercy's sake delay not an instant!" cried Madeleine.

The General drew forth a printed document, at the head of which the word "Pardon" was conspicuous in huge letters. He inserted the name of Antoine Duroc, and hastily signed his own name to the parchment. "I have taken a great deal upon myself, young woman," he said as he handed the document to Madeleine, "But hasten with this pardon to the prison. Lose no time or you will arrive too late. If, on your arrival, the prisoners have been removed, hasten to present the pardon to the officer in command of the firing-party —— Yet stay—you know not the way about Paris."

"My carriage is in waiting, Monsieur le General," said the prefet. "My coachman will drive the young woman to the prison. I will accompany her thither."

"It is unnecessary, Monsieur le Sous-prefet," said the General. "A commissionaire from this bureau shall accompany her. He will know how to proceed."

A commissionaire was called, and instructed to present the pardon of Antoine Duroc to the chief jailor of La Roquette, or to the officer in command of the firing-party. But Madeleine insisted upon being herself the bearer of her husband's pardon, and received the document from the commissionaire. Then, bewildered between excess of joy, mingled with doubt and fear lest she should arrive too late, she followed the commissionaire without waiting to express her thanks to the General.

The sous-prefet assisted her into the carriage, and wished her success; and then bade his coachman drive with all possible speed to La Roquette.

At length the prison of La Roquette was reached. The commissionaire alighted from the vehicle, and ringing the large bell, demanded to see the chief jailor. But on stating his errand, he was informed that the condemned prisoners had already been marched to the place of execution. "But there is yet time," added the jailor. "They have but just left. It is now half-past eleven o'clock. You have half an hour to spare, and the fosse is not far distant. But Madame must alight from the carriage and walk. The road is impassable to vehicles of any description."

On hearing these words, Madeleine sprang from the carriage, and conducted by the commissionaire, hurried breathlessly on. "You know the shortest road, Monsieur Commissionaire," she said. "For heaven's sake, hasten on!"

The commissionaire nodded assent. But he was a comparative stranger to that part of the city, and he soon missed his way. Leaving Madeleine, in a fever of dread and impatience, he went into a shop to inquire the way to the Place Voltaire. To the anxious girl he appeared to be so long absent, that she hastened after him. She found the shop after two or three inquiries; but when she reached it, the commissionaire had quitted it to return to her, and had missed her. The streets were thronged with people. Madeleine, almost crazed with dread, passed amongst them, inquiring her way of one and then of another, but the directions she received only served further to bewilder her, and she wandered further and further astray. A church clock near by chimed the quarters. Madeleine listened breathlessly. "Three quarters!" she cried in a paroxysm of fear; "only a quarter of an hour to spare! I shall be too late!"

She had turned into a by-street, which was almost deserted. Two working-men, carrying the tools necessary to their trade, were approaching her. They were the only individuals in the narrow street. As they drew near, she entreated them to guide her to the fosse where the prisoners were to be executed. Her quaint garb was calculated to attract attention in Paris, and the men supposed her to be a country girl who had come to the city on a holiday visit.

"What would'st thou do at the fosse?" asked one of the men. "Is it a pleasure to thee to see poor, miserable, starving wretches shot down like dogs, because they demand a share of the wealth and food that of right belongs alike to all?" The man was hurrying on in disgust, when his companion remarked Madeleine's wild and distracted look.

"Perchance, Adolphe," said he, "the poor girl has reason to ask the way to the fosse. Maybe some friend or lover is doomed to be shot at noon. She looks as though she were crazed with grief."

"Nay, then—Is it so young woman? Dost thou wish to see the last of some unfortunate friend or relation? Whence comest thou?" asked the man Adolphe.

"I am a fisherwoman of Honfleur, Messieurs," replied Madeleine. "My husband has been falsely accused, and unjustly condemned to die. I bear his pardon, and have lost my way. I fear that I shall arrive too late! As you may some day crave for mercy, Messieurs, take pity upon me, and guide me to the spot. See, here is my husband's pardon;" and she drew forth the precious document from her bosom and held it before the two men.

"Poor woman! Thou art coming away from the Place Voltaire, where the fosse is situated," said the man who had spoken last. "Thou has little time indeed to spare. But come with us; we will guide thee thithier." The men turned and quickened their steps, and Madeleine breathlessly followed them.

Meanwhile, the commissionaire, on leaving the shop, could see nothing of the young woman whom he had told to wait his return. He hurried to and fro, and inquired for a young woman dressed in fisherman's costume; but all in vain. "Perhaps," thought he, "the young woman has gone on to the fosse by herself, being too impatient to wait for me."

At all events, he thought the wisest plan would be to hasten on; and if the young woman had not arrived when he reached the spot, to inform the officer in command of the troops that the prisoner Antoine Duroc was pardoned. It wanted but three minutes to twelve o'clock when he reached the fosse, around which a great crowd had assembled, and in which—their backs placed against a low mound—the doomed prisoners had already drawn up. Approaching a young lieutenant, who was coolly smoking a cigar, as he paced leisurely to and fro, the commissionaire informed the young officer that a pardon had been granted to Antoine Duroc, one of the condemned prisoners, and begged him to stay the man's execution.

"Where is the pardon you speak of?" asked the officer. "Produce it."

"I do not have it with me," replied the commissionaire; and then told how he had missed the young woman who was the wife of the pardoned man, and who carried the pardon in her bosom.

"You missed the young woman after you and she alighted from the carriage of Monsieur le Sous-prefet de Police?" said the officer. "A likely story is it not? Are you crazed, man, that you imagine the execution will be stayed at the bidding of the sous-prefet? Or is this some trick to gain time? Do you see yonder clock? The minute hand points at two minutes to twelve. At twelve o'clock I shall give the order to fire."

There was much jealousy existing at this period between the civil and military authorities, in consequence of the supreme authority being for the time in the hands of the latter; and when the commissionaire spoke of the Sous-prefet de Police, the young officer seized the opportunity to snub the police authorities.

"You will repent it, Monsieur Lieutenant, if you do not delay," replied the commissionaire, "The pardon is signed by Monsieur le General Beaumont, by whom I was directed to guide the young woman to this spot, that she might deliver to you her husband's pardon with her own hands."

"Signed by whom?" asked the lieutenant.

The commissionaire repeated the name of the General.

"Monsieur le Capitaine!" called the lieutenant to another officer who was standing a short distance off.

The captain approached, and the two officers conferred together. They decided that they would at all events delay the execution for five minutes.

"Then I shall give the order to fire," said the captain. "I transgress my duty even in delaying five minutes, unless the pardon is produced."

The church clock struck the hour of noon. The prisoners, when the first stroke sounded, were seen to shudder, and a low murmur was audible amongst the spectators; but Antoine Duroc, though his face was pale, stood firm and erect, awaiting his doom, while the greater number of the other prisoners appeared to be completely cowed. The handsome, manly appearance of the young fisherman, contrasting so remarkably with the miserable creatures who were doomed to die with him, had attracted the notice of many of the spectators, especially among the females. But they were not generally moved to pity. It appeared rather as if they regarded it as a novelty—a fresh attraction to see a handsome young man doomed to share the fate of the other prisoners, and yet so different from the generality of the wretched Communists who, almost every day, were doomed to death.

When, however, the last stroke of twelve had sounded and the order to fire was withheld, the low murmur amongst the spectators increased to a cry of anger and complaint. "Why do not the soldiers fire!" they asked of another. "What is the cause of delay? Are we to wait all day long?" And when it was whispered amongst them that a pardon had arrived for one of the doomed men—and it was suspected that the favored individual was the handsome young fisherman Duroc—they betrayed manifest signs that they considered themselves defrauded of a portion of the spectacle that they had assembled to witness. At length the five minutes of delay expired. The order was given to the soldiers to fall into rank and prepare to fire.

"The pardon will arrive, I assure you, Messieurs Officers," said the commisssionaire. "You had better yet further delay the execution."

"I will wait two minutes longer, and no more," replied the captain. "I have already transgressed my orders. I must do my duty, pardon or no pardon. I have no business to know anything of it until I have seen the document."

The prisoners had learned that one of their number was to receive his pardon, but they knew not whom, though they somehow suspected that it was the young fisherman who was to be pardoned, and they bitterly resented the favor shown to him by the government.

The two additional minutes of delay had expired. The soldiers drew up. The rattle of their arms was audible.

"Attention! Present arms!" shouted the officer in command, throwing away his half-smoked cigar. Such events were now everyday affairs to him and his brother militaires. Still he hesitated to give the final dread order.

Tir, the word Tirez—draw, or fire—was upon his lips, but it was not yet pronounced, when a young woman in a state of wild distraction appeared upon the scene. It was Madeleine.

"You are yet in time, Madame," said one of the two men who had guided her to the spot. "I feared that we were too late."

"Thank God!" exclaimed the young girl, raising her eyes and clasped hands to heaven. She caught sight of her husband. "Antoine, my dear Antoine, my loved husband, thou art pardoned, thou art free!" she cried; heedless of everything around her—seeing no one save her husband, she was rushing swiftly towards him, when the young lieutenant placed his hand, not unkindly, upon her shoulder and drew her gently back.

"Why do you stop me, Monsieur!" she fiercely cried. "I go to embrace my husband, who is free. I have brought his pardon."

"Will Madame produce the pardon?" said the young officer. "If it be correct, the husband of Madame will be instantly liberated."

The pardon was produced, and closely examined. The General's signature was well known to both the officers; and the young fisherman, to whom the whole affair appeared like an ugly dream, was set free.

Antoine could scarcely satisfy himself that he was awake, and that everything he beheld around him was reality; for he had heard nothing of his wife's arrival in Paris, and had believed her to be still waiting at Honfleur for his return.

"Is it a dream—a horrible dream?" he asked himself—"the legacy, the visit to Paris, the assault of the mob, the rescue of the poor country lad, my own arrest, and trial, and condemnation—everything!" These thoughts passed through his mind in an instant. He was dazed; his brain was bewildered; he staggered like a drunken man, and gazed wildly around him. He did not even respond to the embrace of his young wife!

Meanwhile, the spectators continued to murmur; and the miserable men who still awaited their doom scowled enviously and savagely upon him.

"Why is he pardoned, while the other poor wretches are left to meet their doom?" some of the spectators asked. The people were getting accustomed to such spectacles. Still, there were some among the female onlookers who sympathised with the young fisherman and his pretty wife, and wept tears of delight when Madeleine embraced her husband—as they would have done had they beheld such a scene in a theatre.

At length a soldier on furlough stepped forth from amongst the crowd and laid his hand upon Antoine's shoulder.

"Come, mon brave, come away," said he, "unless thou preferrest to remain to be shot." And he led the young fisherman away from the fosse, Antoine walking like one in sleep.

Scarcely had they gone twenty paces beyond the mound in the rear of the fosse, when the sharp stern word of command was heard, instantly followed by the clang of arms and the report of a volley of musketry.

Antoine shuddered, and awoke, as it were, instantly to consciousness. "But for the pardon that arrived at the last moment," he thought, "that report had been my death-knell! I should now be lying a senseless clod stretched in the ditch!"

Madeleine uttered a sharp cry of horror and clung tightly to her husband's arm.

The soldier alone seemed to think nothing of the matter. "Bear up! bear up, my comrade," he said kindly. "I felt something as thou dost now, when, years ago, in the Crimea, I came near being shot by the Russians as a spy, and when two of my brother-soldiers, as innocent of the charge as I was, suffered death. But I must leave thee now. It will not do for me to be seen fraternising too closely with one who has been condemned as a Communist thief and assassin, though I believe thee to be as innocent of such a crime as I am. Bonjour, Monsieur—Madame, adieu!" And touching his shako, he turned aside, and left the newly re[united hus]band and wife to themselves.

A solemn silence had succeeded the [volley] of musketry, and then there was a tra[mp of] many feet, and a chattering of many v[oices,] and the crowd dispersed, possibly to [come] again and witness such another scene [to-]morrow. Some overtook, and looked [earn]estly at the young fisherman and his w[ife as] they passed them by; and one pretty [girl] stepped up to Madeleine and embrace[d her] lovingly and placed a posy of wild-flow[ers in] her hand.

Antoine and Madeleine had much to [tell] each other of what had occurred to [them] since they had parted in the railway [depot] at Honfleur.

"My beloved husband," said Made[leine,] when she ended her story, "I felt a [pre]sentment of approaching evil when I [left] thee at the depot to return home [alone.] Could I have had my will, I would [have] have forfeited thy old aunt's legacy, [and] have restrained thee from visiting this [wick]ed city. But I cannot explain to thee [what] I felt when thy letter arrived in place of [thy]self!"

Antoine and Madeleine returned the [next] day to Honfleur, after having paid a vi[sit to] the fair and gentle daughter of the sou[s-pre]fet, to thank her for the generous symp[athy] which had induced her father to exer[t his] influence with General Beaumont in Anto[ine's] behalf. They cared little for the gaiet[y of] Paris, where, amidst so much splen[dor] and wealth, there is also so much pov[erty,] misery and crime; and determined ne[ver] of their own free-will, to set foot i[n it] again. "Adieu, Antoine!" said Madele[ine,] as her husband parted from her for his [next] voyage; "I would rather trust thee with [the] wild sea, than with the people of that t[erri]ble city."

(THE END.)

Outrages in the South Seas.

Particulars of several terrible outr[ages] committed by the South Sea Islanders [have] just been received at Liverpool, from w[hich] it appears that in addition to the murde[r of] the captain of a trading steamer and [the] wounding of some of the crew, the treach[er]ous natives have also burned down a trad[ing] factory and massacred the occupants. [The] outrages in question occurred at the Her[mit] Island. The steamer "Fria," it seems, [an]chored off the island, and the captain [at] once proceeded in a small boat to the sh[ore.] Everything was perfectly quiet, no sign[s of] life being seen. On reaching the shore [the] captain jumped out of the boat, when [in]stantly a volley of firing was heard, and [the] unfortunate man fell dead on the bea[ch,] pierced through the body by five or [six] bullets. The firing came from a cluster [of] mangrove shrubs, and was followed b[y a] rush of some dozen natives, who ran d[own] to the beach in the direction of the b[oat.] The crew with all speed backed water [and] made for the direction of the steamer; [but] before they could get out of reach [the] boat received a number of rifle shots in [her] side. One of the crew was also shot thro[ugh] the thigh and was in a dangerous condit[ion.] The mate then took charge of the stea[mer] and brought her to Mutudi. The stea[mer] "Pacific," belonging to the same owner[s as] the "Fria"—a German firm, named He[rn]stein & Co.—anchored about one hun[dred] and fifty yards off the same island. Mes[srs.] Hernstein had established a factory on H[er]mit Island and, on the "Pacific" gett[ing] near, it was seen that the premises had b[een] burnt to the ground. A few minutes a[fter] anchoring the steamer was fired on, the [as]sailants being hidden in a clump of mang[rove] trees. The crew returned the fire, but t[hey] could see nothing of their opponents, b[eing] only able to ascertain their whereabouts [by] the flash of their rifles in the bush e[very] time they fired. After this the enemy o[pen]ed fire from both sides of the bay, so th[at it] was deemed advisable to lift anchors [and] leave the spot. The fire, however, m[ade] the deck of the steamer untenable, and t[he] sailors were unable to weigh anchor. [At] last the captain ordered the engines to [be] put full speed, and the anchor was drag[ged] along until the vessel was out of reach of [the] fire. Nothing was seen of the occupien[ts of] the factory on shore, and it was belie[ved] they had been massacred before the fact[ory] itself was burnt down.—London Stand[ard.]

Kissing the Bride.

There is a popular notion that it is [the] privilege of the clergyman who ties the k[not] to be the first to kiss the bride on the c[on]clusion of the ceremony. Mr Henderson, [in] his Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties, [re]lates how a clergyman, after performing [a] marriage in a Yorkshire village, was s[ur]prised to see the party keep together a[s if] expecting something. "What are y[ou] waiting for?" he asked at last. "Plea[se,] sir," was the bridegroom's answer, "y[e've] no kissed Molly." Not many years ago, [we] are told how a fair lady from the county [of] Durham, who was married in the south [of] England, so undoubtedly reckoned for t[he] clerical salute that, after waiting for it [in] vain, she boldly took the initiative, and b[e]stowed a kiss on the much-amazed sou[thern] country vicar. The practice, too, was [for] years past much kept up in Scotland, and [is] referred to in the following old song, [in] which the bridegroom, addressing the m[in]ister, says:

"It's no very decent for you to be kissing;
It does not look well in the black coat av[a;]
'Twould have set you far better tae hae gi[en]
your blessing
Than thus by such tricks to be breaking t[he] law."
"Dear Wattie," quo' Robin, "it's just an old c[us]
tom,
An' the thing that is common should ne'er ill ta'en;
For where ye are wrong, if ye hadna ha' wi[sh] ed him,
You should ha' been first. It's yoursel' to blame."

It has been suggested that this custom m[ay] be a relic of the osculum pacis, or the pr[es]entation of the Pax to the newly marr[ied] pair. Mr. Henderson also informs us th[at] some years ago it was customary in Irela[nd] for the clergyman to conclude the marri[age] ceremony with the words, "Kiss your wif[e,"] and occasionally "the bridegroom was h[ard] put to prevent one or other of his comp[an]ions from intercepting the salute design[ed] for himself."

A Story for the Marines.

There was a Russian fellow that had a sand-pit all of his own, right in front of our trenches. I never saw anybody so persevering as that man was. Early in the morning he'd be popping away, and there he'd stay until nightfall, taking his food with him into the pit. He seemed to take a real pleasure in it, and as he was a very fine shot and never let us get much of a chance at him, he was not a popular character in the advanced trenches. Many a good fellow he sent to glory. It got such a nuisance that we dropped shells at him now and again, but he minded them no more than if they had been so many oranges. One day I was down in the trenches, when Col. Mancor, of the Forty-eighth,—a splendid shot and a great man for sport—came along. A party with a Sergeant were at work, and just as the Colonel came up, one of them dropped with a ball through his head. "Deuced good shot! Who fired that?" says the Colonel, putting up his eye-glass. "Man in the rifle pit to the left, Sir," answers the Sergeant. "Never saw a neater shot," says the Colonel. "He only showed for a moment, and wouldn't have shown then only that the edge of the trench is a bit worn away. Does he often shoot like that?" "Terribly dangerous man," replies the Sergeant; "kills more than all the guns in the Redan." "Now, Major," says the Colonel, turning to another officer who was with him, "What's the odds against my picking him off?" "In how long?" "Within ten minutes." "Two to one, in ponies, I'll give you," says the Major. "Say three, and it's a bargain." "Three to one in ponies," answered the major, and the bet was made. He was a great man for measuring his powder, was the Colonel, and always emptied out a cartridge and then filled it up again according to his taste. He took about half the time getting the Sergeant's gun loaded to please him. At last he got it right, and the glass screwed well into his eye. "Now, my lads," says he, "just push poor Smith here up over the trench. He's dead enough, and another wound will make little difference to him." The men began to hoist the body up, and the Colonel stood, may be 20 yards off, peering over the edge with eyes like a lynx. As soon as the top of Smith's shako appeared, we saw the barrel of the gun come slowly out of the sand-pit, and when his poor dead face looks over the edge, whizz comes a bullet right through his forehead. The Russian, he peeps out of the pit to see the effect of his shot, and he never looks at anything again until he sees the everlasting river. The Colonel fired with a sort of chuckle, and the rifleman sprang up in the air, and ran a matter of 10 or 12 paces toward us, and then down on his face as dead as a door-nail. "Double or quits on the man in the pit to the right," says the Colonel, loading up his gun again, but I think the Major had dropped money enough for one day over his shooting, for he wouldn't hear of another try. By the way, it was handed over to Smith's widow, for he was a free-handed gentleman, was the Colonel, not unlike yourself, Sir.—All the Year Round.

The Czar and Czarina Dancing.

Recently in the English Palace at Peterhoff, there was a ball in favor of the asylum for aged and crippled soldiers, established in memory of the Emperor Nicholas I. Their imperial Majesties, the Emperor and Empress were pleased to be present. There were also the Queen of Greece, the Grand Dukes Serge and Paul, the Grand Duchess Alexandria Josephovna with her two sons, the Duke of Leicetenberg and the Prince of Oldenburg. The tickets were sold to everybody without any restriction. Such balls are held in the English Palace annually, but this ball surpassed those of former years by its brilliant decorations and genuine merriment. All the rooms of the palace were profusely ornamented with tropical plants from the imperial hot-houses. In the dancing room a portrait of Nicholas, in full size, was hidden behind some luxuriant plants, and the effect was that the late Emperor appeared gazing at the dancing parties. At 10 o'clock the Queen of Greece arrived and opened the ball. At half past 10 their Majesties, the Emperor and the Empress, appeared. The Emperor wore the uniform of the Finn Guards, and the Empress wore a dress of bright rose satim embroidered with rich lace and white pearls. On her head she had a diadem ornamented with eight large diamonds. Their Majesties were met by the Princess of Oldenburg, and all the managers of the ball. Gen. Arapoff had the happiness to present the Empress with a beautifnl bouquet. Then their Majesties went into the dancing room and graciously took part in the dancing. Both the Emperor and Empress favored many of those present with their gracious conversation. At half past 12 they left the ball, which continued till 4 a. m. Pecuniarily considered this ball was also a great success.—From the St. Petersburg Pravitelstvenny Vestnik.

Population of the Globe.

The population of the earth has long been a fascinating study for statisticians Behm and Wagner, who have just published an emended edition of a former work in Germany. They give the total as 1,433,887,500—which is about 23,000,000 less than their estimates of two years ago. They have concluded that China has 50,000,000 less than they formerly supposed. There has thus been an actual increase of about 38,000,000 in the population of the globe—an increase, however, which must be spread over ten years, as many of the recent censuses are decennial. For Europe the present population is 327,743,400, showing an increase of about 12,000,000 over the previous figures by the operation of the censuses. In Asia, making allowance for the readjustment of the population of China, there has been an increase of 20,000,000, the present population being set down at 795,591,000. Of course the estimates must sometimes be a little better than guesses, for example, for such places as Africa. For this continent Dr. Rohlfs maintains that the estimate of 100,000,000 is quite enough, while Behm and Wagner retain the old figure of 200,000,000 with considerable hesitation.

A stranger called at forty-eight different houses in Cleveland and asked: "is the boss home?" There was no man home in any one instance, and yet forty-seven of the women promptly replied, "Yes, sir; what do you want?"

Effective Work.

The following specific information, imparted by thoroughly reliable people, will convey a clearer idea than any amount of abstract reference, how certain desirable results are being accomplished. Mr. Alexander McKechnie, Rochesterville, Ottawa, Ont., says: "I was a perfect cripple with rheumatism in my arms and feet for more that two weeks, when I was advised to try St. Jacobs Oil. I did so; in two days I went to work, and at the end of a week I was as well as ever. I consider St. Jacobs Oil a 'dead' sure cure for rheumatism in every form." Mr James Dempsey, Coburgh street, Ottawa, is pleased to remark: "Having suffered for some time past with rheumatism in the back, I am gratified to say that I have been completely cured after a few applications of St. Jacob's Oil, and can confidently recommend it to any one suffering in like manner."

What is the difference between an old tramp and a feather bed? There is a material difference. One is hard up and the other is soft down.

Bad Blood.

The blood is the true essence of vitality, without pure blood there can be no healthy action in the system. Boils, blotches, pimples and the various humors and blemishes of the skin are only symptomatic of bad blood—that needs purifying at its fountain head, to render its tributaries pure. Burdock Blood Bitters effectually cleanse the blood from all humors, obtains a healthy action of the liver, bowels, kidneys, skin, etc, and strengthening while it regulates and purifies. (1)

Who Should Suffer?

The many who daily suffer agony from corns, bunions, callous lumps, when the means of remedy can be so easily procured. Putnam's great remedy for corns is the new article, but it commands the confidence of every druggist in Canada, as all can testify that Putnam's Corn Extractor is a sure thing. The man who neglects this suggestion to try Putnam's Extractor ought to suffer. Use not "the article just as good." Flesh-destroying and dangerous substitutes are offered as a substitute for Putuam's. Of such beware.

At All Seasons of the Year

corns are troublesome, let the weather be hot or cold. Rain relieves not the pain, the sun may shine and all else be fair and pleasant but their tormenting presence follows the victim always. A certain, a prompt, a painless, a radical cure is always insured by the use of the great and only remedy—"Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor." We warn the public against dangerous substitutes and imitations. N. C. POLSON & Co., Proprietors, Kingston.

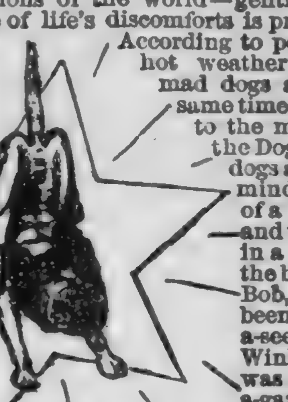
TORMENT, INDEED.

Life's vexations do not generally come on one like a storm descending the mountain or like a whirlwind; they come as the rain does in some sections of the world—gently, but every day. One of life's discomforts is presented herewith:



23

According to popular impression, hot weather, mosquitoes and mad dogs all flourish at the same time and are chargeable to the malefic influence of the Dog Star. Speaking of dogs and the Dog Star reminds us of a boy's story of a dog and the comet, and which we here give in a short extract from the boy's letter: "Golly, Bob, you ought to ha' been there last night to a-seen the fun. Tom Winkins' dorg Toddles was a-settin' at the gate a-gazin' at the Comit, when along comes old Sykes durned rat tarrier and the 2 waltzed over the fence and the 2 fought. The tarrier proved too much for Toddles, and afore they could haul him off the battle ground he had made a good square meal off his hide. Tom was in despair. A kind looking gentleman in a broad brim hat told him to get a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL and rub him with it, and it would cure him in no time. What does Tom do but steal into the chapel at Vesper time and slide into Father Jacobs confessional box and beg of him a bottle of his oil with which to rub his dorg. The Father felt of Tom's head; it was hot an' afore Tom could utter a prayer, two men were luggin' him home followed by a great crowd, who kept at a safe distance, thinking he had been bit by a mad dorg. The more he kicked and screamed to be let free, the tighter they held on to him." In reference to another torment, the Chicago Western Catholic recently wrote: "Mr. Joel D. Harvey, U. S. Collector of Internal Revenue, of this city, has spent over two thousand dollars on medicine for his wife, who was suffering dreadfully from rheumatism, and without deriving any benefit whatever; yet two bottles of ST. JACOBS OIL accomplished what the most skillful medical men failed in doing. We could give the names of hundreds who have been cured by this wonderful remedy did space permit us. The latest man who has been made happy through the use of this valuable liniment is Mr. James A. Conlan, librarian of the Union Catholic Library of this city. The following is Mr. Conlan's indorsement:

UNION CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION,
204 Dearborn Street,
CHICAGO, Sept. 16, 1880.

I wish to add my testimony to the merits of ST. JACOBS OIL as a cure for rheumatism. One bottle has cured me of this troublesome disease, which gave me a great deal of bother for a long time; but, thanks to the remedy, I am cured. This statement is unsolicited by any one in its interest.

Very respectfully,
JAMES A. CONLAN, Librarian.

"No, sir," said the laborer, "I don't hire out to that farmer. His confounded fences are all barbed wire, and I can't get a minute's rest climbing over."

HARASSING DREAMS.—An unnatural excitement of the brain and nervous system is the direct cause of sleeplessness, as also of harassing nocturnal dreams. VEGETINE has a peculiarly soothing effect in all such cases, when just taken before going to bed.

Davy & Clark, Druggists, Renfew, writes us June 3rd. "We have sold Fowler's Extracts of Wild Strawberry for a number of years, and find nothing equal to it, for the purpose for which it is designed." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cures all forms of Bowel complaints incident to Summer and Fall.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

For Purifying the Blood.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia, and Mandrake, with the Iodides of Potash and Iron, makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. This boiler is so arranged that it is readily taken apart in sections enabling purchasers to clean thoroughly every part of it and prevent burning out. We know from experience this is absolutely necessary with the alkaline waters of the great Western prairies. Largely used by the Pacific Railway Company and all the large Colonization and Ranche Companies.

MARKDALE, SEPT. 28TH, 1882.

OUR TOWN.

There has been many building improvements in our Town of Markdale during the present season, none of which, however, have so far progressed as to be able to give an extended notice of their dimensions or appearance just yet. Mr. Reynolds' new dwelling is the nearest completion, and to it we wended our way a few days ago; and although put in a fit stage of completion to meet the eye of a connoiseur, yet the symmetry of the building cannot fail to arrest the eye of any lover of architectural beauty. Upon entering the building we found it encumbered with the debris of carpenters' and plasterers' business; but were at once struck with admiration at the neatly finished walls, which upon inspection with our non-critical view, we pronounced perfect, inasmuch as a straight level on a ten-foot wall, scarcely a sheet of paper could be inserted between. This is the true standard of workmanship, we believe. On the front of the building, upon both stories, there are two bay windows, and on a straight line with the main wall in the rear of these, is an arch, moulded in a mechanical and artistic style hitherto unknown in this section of country, and crowned with caps and corbels which would do credit to the skill of the Grecian masters of old, for their beauty of execution. The column supporting this arch is as true in its lines as though drawn by the rule of the limner. Credit must also be given to those who prepared the material, for a smoother surface we never felt upon a plastered wall. The work was done by Mr. Joseph Gibson.

In a short time the entire building will be ready for inspection, and we believe its appearance will tend to hasten many of the half-formed "engagements" now on hand, to a completion. Perhaps, more anon.

GLENELG FALL SHOW.

The morning was cool and dry, and the weather during the day was all that could be desired. At an early hour the various productions were coming in from all sides, and by eight o'clock the yard round the hall was thronged with vehicles bearing their products. The hall was fairly filled with the various articles comprising that department. The exhibit of fall wheat was large and of excellent quality. Spring wheat small and the sample under an average; barley, the same; peas, good; oats, fair; roots were generally good, especially potatoes, which were excellent. Fruit was of a very fine quality and a good display. There was bread and butter in abundance.

In the ladies' department the exhibit was well up and very creditable to the exhibitors. A fair display of fancy work was shown but scarcely up to previous years On the whole the inside department was ahead of former years. Quite a variety of poultry was exhibited.

Horses—in this class there was a good show and close competition. Cattle were scarcely up to former years. Mr. Shepherdson, of Euphrasia, had a fine lot of sheep, otherwise we would have to report a falling off in this line. There were some very good swine. In manufactures we have to report a great falling off, owing, we presume, partly to exhibitions being held on each side of us the same day—Clarksburg on the East, and South Grey at Durham. Those two doubtless had a serious effect on our show this year. Mr. Sarjeant had a patent load lifter which attracted the attented of many farmers, which he will also have on exhibition at Flesherton on Friday.

On the whole the exhibition was a success. The officers and directors did all in their power to give general satisfaction, and we compliment them on their efforts. The following is the

PROVIDENCE BAY, MANITOULIN.

The crops here this year are above the average, the barns being well filled and a number of stacks outside. We have a seed drill in this section already and no doubt reapers and mowers will be brought in shortly. There is also a large lumbering business carried on which gives employment to a number of men winter and summer.

Mr. Herbert Irwin, of Markdale, is teaching school here and is giving good satisfaction.

S. A. WILSON.

Two good Organs cheap at W. F. Dolls.

A regular meeting of the Loyal Markdale Lodge of the C. O. O. F., will be held in their hall on Monday evening at 8 o'clock sharp. A full attendence is requested.—W. L. YOUNG, Sec'y.

Watches and Clocks, the best, at W. F. Doll's.

Rev. Mr. McDiarmid is at present holding special meetings at the Town Line appointment with very gratifying success.

Box Brown is coming to Markdale on the 10th October to give a dramatic entertainment,

The potatoes at our exhibition were something immense for size. One man brought a bag, and when he saw what was ahead, he became discouraged, and did not exhibit; he presented them to 'ye editor', and when cleaned were cut each in three pieces in order to put in a pot to boil. He will please accept our thanks.

Sewing machines, see them at W. F. Doll's, first class and cheap.

THE BAZAAR.—The Ladies Association of the Presbyterian Church held their annual bazaar and dinner in the agricultural grounds, which was well patronised. The art gallery and musical entertainment came off in the Hall in the evening. The Hall was very handsomely adorned with Oil Paintings, Chromo's, Drawings, etc., many of which were very fine specimens. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental music, readings, recitations, songs, dialogues &c., &c., all of which were handled in a masterly manner, and deserves a more extended report, but we are already filled up, and our time for going to press is at hand. The total proceeds for the day amounts to the handsome sum of $100.

WILL YOU EXCHANGE a case of Dyspepsia or Biliousness for 75 cents? It is awfully unwise to agonize under the many ailments arising from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Disordered Stomach and Liver, when this offer is made to you in your own home in all sincerity, with an absolute certainty of curing you.

ZOPESA (from Brazil) cures Dyspepsia and Biliousness. A single dose relieves; a sample bottle convinces; a 75 cent bottle cures.

It acts directly upon the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys.

Cleansing, Correcting, Regulating, Zopesa gives energy and vim to the Brain, Nerve, and Muscle, simply by working wonders upon the Digestion, and giving activity to the Liver.

Cut this out, take it to any dealer in medicines, and get at least one 75 cent bottle of Zopesa, and tell your neighbor how it acts. It is warranted to cure Dyspepsia and Biliousness.

A REMARKABLE CASE

W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, suffered from a disease of the Liver and Kidneys, that brought him so low that his life was despaired of; he lay for 10 and 13 days without an operation of the bowels; after taking one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters he was enabled to leave his bed and drive out, three bottles more completed a cure, and he says that he is now a better man than he has been for years.

W. E. Gifford, Pastor M. E. Church, Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he tells us in a recent letter that he considers it the best family medicine now before the country for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

Mr. Robert Wilson, of the City Surveyor's office, and Street Commissioner of the Eastern Division for the Board of Public Works, Toronto, Ont., who is very fond of shooting says: "To lose a duck hunt is a loss for which there is no adequate recompense. This misfortune lately overtook me. The boys got together recently and made arrangements for a good hunt. At the time the arrangements were entered into I was in good health generally; but just as the shooting was to take place, my old enemy, the rheumatism, came back to stay with me awhile again, and I had to forego the pleasure. The rheumatism has been a source of great bother to me, and I have done a great deal of doctoring for it, without much good. When the last attack came on me and crippled my hands so that they were drawn up, a friend of mine recommended St. Jacob's Oil, the Great German Remedy. I tried it, I am happy to say, and the result is that I am now cured and as well as ever. St. Jacob's Oil succeeded where more than a score of other liniments and medicines had failed."

THE BRITISH IN CAIRO.

How They Caught Arabi—The Welcome by the Populace—Arabi and the Turks An Eye-witness Account.

The following particulars of the occupation of Cairo by General Drury Lowe are from one of the officers of cavalry :—" We reached Belbeis on the evening of the battle. After slight skirmishing we took possession and halted there that night. In the morning we started early and pushed straight on to Cairo, keeping along the borders of the desert. At every village the people came with white flags and proclaimed themselves faithful to the Khedive. We overtook large numbers of the fugitives, who threw away their arms and made signs of submission. When towards evening we arrived in front of the Abassia barracks outside of Cairo we were met by the officer in command with a squadron of cavalry in extended order across the plain with white flags tied to their carbines. The officer informed General Lowe that the town and garrison surrendered and that no opposition would be offered. He also stated that all was quiet and that no popular outbreak had taken place. He expressed his readiness to make arrangements to supply rations to the men and forage to the horses. Although the commanding officer expressed himself thus peaceably the situation for a short time was critical, as 10,000 infantry had formed in parade at the time. However, the firmness of the attitude of the British officer had its effect. The Egyptian troops, piling their arms, re-entered their quarters.

HOW ARABI SURRENDERED.

The Governor of the city was then sent for and told by General Lowe that he was aware that Arabi was in Cairo and demanded his surrender. He offered to send a body of troops to surround Arabi's house. The Governor, however, said that this was unnecessary, as he would deliver him up. Then the Governor returned into the city and brought out Arabi and Toulba Pashas. Arabi, on delivering himself up, said to General Lowe that he had at first no intention of fighting the English, for whom he had always a great respect ; but the war was forced upon him. For this he blamed Tewfik Pasha ; but, being a soldier, when the fighting began he was bent upon fighting. Now that all was over the Egyptians and English were brothers again. He trusted himself to English honor as a soldier whose army had been defeated. Arabi's manner was dignified and composed. General Lowe replied that he could not enter on the subject of the war. His only mission was to arrest him.

OCCUPYING THE CITADEL.

Captain Watson, of the Intelligence Department, escorted by mounted infantry and two squadrons of dragoons, made a d tour round the city to the citadel and summoned the commander to surrender. This he did at once. After a brief discussion it was arranged that the Egyptian garrison should march out of one gate while the English mounted guard entered by the other. Cairo presents a strange appearance. The shops are all closed, but the streets are crowded by natives. Some cast hostile looks on the troops, but the majority are evidently rejoiced at the course events have taken. Each body of troops as it marched through the streets was accompanied by crowds of admiring Arabs. From the windows and balconies of many houses women waved salutations of welcome, and the whole population appeared to be relieved that the war was ended. Numbers of weary fugitives from Tel-el-Kebir continue to arrive, also disbanded troops from other parts of the country. There is a complete break up of the Egyptian army. Conversing with some of Arabi's officers they tell me that beyond doubt the rapid arrival of the cavalry alone prevented further fighting.

A CATASTROPHE AVERTED.

The city would probably have been burned by the mob had they not arrived. The news of the defeat at Tel-el-Kebir excited the greatest grief and consternation among the population, but before they had time to come to any conclusion as to what action should be taken, the arrival of General Drury Lowe and the cavalry at once put a stop to the plans of the violent portion of the mob. When they reached the city Arabi and Toulba had a long conversation with some friends as to whether they should fly to the desert, but on the advice of Ninet, the Swiss gentleman who had remained with the Egyptian ambulance throughout the war, they determined to give themselves up to the English and not to Tewfik Pasha. M. Ninet tells me that the national party has been shamefully betrayed by M. de Lesseps. They entirely depended upon his assurances that he would prevent any landing in the canal. He sent word that he took it upon himself to keep the canal, according to conventions, outside of the sphere of hostilities. When General Wolseley spread the report that he was going to land at Aboukir Arabi did not believe it, but thought that the troops were being embarked in order to prevent the Turks from landing.

ARABI'S HOPES.

Had the Turks landed Arabi hoped to have made an arrangement with them. The first news which he obtained of the troopships having entered the canal was from the Austrian sailors who were taken prisoners at Aboukir fort, it being thought that they were English. It was then too late to take action, as Ismailia was already in possession of the British. The result is that the French are as unpopular with the national as with the Khedive's party during the war. After the wire had been cut direct communication with Constantinople, which was stopped, had been kept up, all information being received by boats from Damietta boarding the Austrian Lloyds steamer and other steamers coming from Beyrout which lay-to off the coast till they were boarded. The reason why the Egyptian attack on the British position at Kassassin collapsed so easily was that the general who commanded was wounded when in front of the force about to launch them at the position. Arabi continues to maintain a quiet and dignified attitude. He is most anxious for an interview with Sir Garnet Wolseley, but the General declines to see him for the present.

Monkeys in India.

In India, where the monkeys live among men, and are the playmates of their children, the Hindoos have grown so fond of them that the four-handed folk participate in all their simple house-hold rites. In the early morning, when the peasant goes out to yoke his plough, and the crow wakes up, and the dog stretches himself and shakes off the dust in which he has slept all night, the old monkey creeps down from the peepul-tree, only half awake, and yawns and looks about him, puts a straw in his mouth, and scratches himself contemplatively.

Then one by one the whole family come slipping down the tree trunk, and they all yawn and look about and scratch. But they are sleepy and peevish, and the youngest get cuffed for nothing, and begin to think life dull. Yet the toilet has to be performed, and whether they like it or not, the young ones are sternly pulled up one by one to their mother to undergo the process. The scene, though regularly repeated every morning, loses nothing of its delightful comicality, and the monkey brats never tire of the joke of "taking in mother." But mamma was young herself not so very long ago, and treats each ludicrous affectation of suffering with profoundest unconcern, and as she dismisses one "cleaned" youngster with a cuff, stretches out her hand for the next one's tail or leg in the most business-like and serious manner possible. The youngsters know their turns quite well, and as each one sees the moment arriving it throws itself on its stomach, as if overwhelmed with apprehension, the others meanwhile stifling their laughter at the capital way so-and-so is doing it, and the instant the maternal paw is extended to grasp its tail the subject of the next experiment utters a dolorous wail, and throwing its arms forward in the dust, allows itself to be dragged along, a limp and helpless carcass, winking all the time, no doubt, at its brothers and sisters, at the way it is imposing on the old lady.

But the old lady will stand no nonsense, and turning the child right side up, proceeds to put it to rights ; takes the kinks out of his tail and the knots out of his fur ; pokes its fingers into its ears, and looks at each of his toes, the inexpressible brat all the time wearing on his face an absurd expression of hopeless and incurable grief. Those who had been already cleaned look on with delight at the screaming farce, while those who are waiting wear a becoming aspect of enormous gravity. The old lady, however, has her joke too, which is to cuff every youngster before she lets it go ; and nimble as her offspring are, she generally, to her credit be it said, manages to give each of them a box on the ear before it is out of reach. The father, meanwhile, sits gravely with his back to all these domestic matters, waiting for breakfast.

Cold Winters.

The following statistics of the good old winters are curious ; In 401, the Black Sea was entirely frozen over. In 768, not only the Black Sea, but the Straits of the Dardanelles, were frozen over ; the snow in some places rose fifty feet high. In 882 great rivers in Europe—the Danube, the Elbe, etc.—were so hard frozen as to bear heavy waggons for a month. In 860, the Adriatic was frozen. In 991, everything was frozen ; the crops totally failed, and famine and pestilence closed the year. In 1067, the most of the travellers in Germany were frozen to death on the roads. In 1133, the Po was frozen from Cremona to the sea ; the wine casks would burst, and even the trees split by the action of the frost with immense noise. In 1316, the crops wholly failed in Germany ; wheat, which some years before sold in England at six shillings the quarter rose to two pounds. In 1339, the crops failed in Scotland, and such a famine ensued that the poor were reduced to feed on grass, and many perished miserably in the fields. The successive winters of 1432-33-34 were uncommonly severe. It once snowed forty days without interruption. In 1468, the wine distributed to the soldiers in Flambro was cut with hatchets. In 1684, the winter was excessively cold. Most of the hollies were killed. Coaches drove along the Thames, the ice of which was eleven inches thick. In 1709 occurred the cold winter. The frost penetrated three yards into the ground. In 1715 booths were erected and fairs held on the Thames. In 1744 and 1745 the strongest ale in England, exposed to the air, was covered in less than fifteen minutes with ice an eighth of an inch thick. In 1809, and again in 1812, the winters were remarkably cold. In 1814 there was a fair on the frozen Thames.

The German Emperor's Appreciation of his Surgeons.

For the second time during the reign of William I., German Emperor and King of Prussia, the highest honor to which a Prussian State official can aspire has been conferred upon a medical man. By the venerable monarch's special decree Dr. von Langenbeck, the eminent pathologist and surgeon, has been raised to the rank of Actual Privy Councillor, with the title of Excellency. The Emperor's body doctor, Lauer, is the only other disciple of Galen in Prussia possessed of this supreme distinction, which, by the way, was bestowed upon him by his Majesty on his sovereign's eightieth birthday, in fulfilment of a jesting promise made ten years previously.

During the customary birthday reception of the court and household on the 22nd of March, 1867, William I., who had that morning completed his tale of three score years and ten, singled out Dr. Lauer from the circle of State officials gathered round him, and shook hands with him, observing jocularly, "Well, Lauer, if you manage to get me as far as eighty, this day ten years I'll make you an excellent present !" Sure enough, a decade later, on the Emperor's natal day, Dr. Lauer received his diploma as Privy Councillor and "Excellency," accompanied by a draft on his Majesty's private bankers for the Prussian equivalent of seven thousand guineas, his valedictory fee as "Body Surgeon to the Emperor and King."—London Telegraph.

The Guion Line steamer "Alaska," Captain Murray, which sailed from New York on September 12th for Queenstown and Liverpool, was signalled passing Fastnet at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. She made the trip in six days, fifteen hours and nineteen minutes. This is the fastest trip ever made between America and Europe. The next fastest time was made by the "Alaska"—namely, 6 days, 22 hours and 10 minutes to Queenstown.

A Vienna journal mentions a death that has occurred in Warsaw in consequence of wearing cinnamon-colored underclothing. The dye faded under perspiration and was partially absorbed by the skin, and poisonous matter contained in it caused death. The first symptoms were vertigo, bleeding from the mouth, and loss of sight. Physicians were unable to give relief, and the victim died in agony. He gave the name of the trader from whom he bought the underclothing in Vienna, and the Warsaw and Vienna police have been in communication about the occurrence. A solution of the dye given internally to a dog produced death in an hour.

Mistook His Man.

"Get off these flags, will you ?" shouted one of the men engaged in pulling down the pavement on the east side of Toronto street to a gentleman in broadcloth, who had stepped aside from the plank for pedestrians, and stood watching the workman's operations. The gentleman smiled grimly, and remarked that he fancied he had a right to look at the work ; he was interested in it. "What do you know about stonemasonry ?" enquired the workman contemptuously. "A great deal more than you, my man," was the gentleman's reply. "Well, I should smile," exclaimed the fellow with a coarse laugh, and then he ordered, with an oath, the gentleman to walk on and mind his own business, which he presently did. "Do you know who that gentleman is ?" asked a reporter, who had overheard the conversation. "Naw !" was the gruff reply. "Well, I'll tell you—that is Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, the ex-premier of Canada. The interest he took in your job was a real one, for though he quit his trade years ago, he was, it is said, one of the best stone-masons in Canada, and I guess, could give you a point or two in masonry." The surly rock-wrestler looked first incredulous, and then, as he became convinced, thunder-struck. Very likely he put in the rest of the day on the ragged edge of suspense, waiting for his boss to come around and lecture him on incivility.—Mail.

A Famous Rogue Elephant Shot.

Mr. G. R. Theobald of the Forest Department, has succeeded in shooting the famous rogue elephant of the Poonas Hills, in the Kollegal Taluk. Mr. Theobald was twice charged by the brute, which was a huge tusker, measuring eleven feet in height, and which has kept the hill villagers in terror for a very long time. This elephant was a few years back driven with twenty-four others into the Kollegal Keddah, at Allambady, but he resisted every effort to capture him, and, being such a large tusker, no pains was spared to secure him, though it was all in vain.

Out of the twenty-four elephants captured with him, he killed no less than nineteen, and finally broke through the keddah gate in spite of the shots fired at him and the fires kept burning. After his escape he is known to have killed three, two women and a man, and many others had very narrow escapes from his furious headlong charges. Besides human beings, he has killed several cattle, and destroyed great quantities of standing crops, causing immense loss to the ryots.

"Speaking of shad, would you say the price has gone up or has risen ?" inquired a schoolboy of a fishmonger. "Well," replied the scale-scraper, "speaking of shad, I should say it had rose."

In New York, recently, twenty-five young men were given instructions, on practical and scientific plumbing. The practical part, it is presumed, consisted in tearing up $50 worth of flooring to repair a 40 cent leak which was was located in another place, while the scientific portion comprised the art of making out a bill.

In boring a well at Cloverdale, Cal., the auger, at a depth of thirty feet, passed through a white-pine log, and six inches further struck a tree standing on end, and was to cease operations. It was about time to stop. If they had bored a foot deeper they might have struck a party of campers-out playing seven-up under the tree, and created a picnic.

"How do yer know that he's a fraud ?" asked the other. "Cos I seen him wiping his nose with a handkercher instead of with his fingers, as all real scouts does."

Annamese Superstitions.

The English consul, in his trade report on Saigon and Cochin China for the past year, gives an interesting account of some of the superstitions which prevail in Annam. It is bad luck for a fish to leap on board a boat ; the fish must be cut in two and thrown into the water again, half on either side. The capture of a porpoise is a very bad omem, for he is the messenger of infernal gods. The cries of a "Gecko," if odd, are lucky ; if even, the reverse. A bird crying at night is always bad— a presage of death, in fact. This is regarded as infelicitous, for some birds of the country only cry at night, and all night. The squeak of a musk-rat announces visits. A cock crowing at noon foretells that the daughters of the house will not turn out well. The tiger is, of course, much dreaded, and the mention of him is interdicted in some districts. Sacrifices of pigs are made at least yearly, with a document attached, which is, or should be, exchanged by the beast for the one sent him the previous year ; if the tiger omits this, it is a bad lookout for the village. However, it is all an affair of predestination, so it does not matter much. The water-buffalo is an imaginary animal living in rivers, and only coming on shore at night ; for all that, he is patent enough in the district, and uncomfortably curious towards Europeans. The Annamese have several kinds of talking birds—commonly a starling or a raven, which looks after the property while the master is absent, and recounts what has passed when he returns. To meet a serpent in the road is a very bad omen, and whatever business is then in hand must be renounced. As for ghosts and spirits they abound in Annam—always, everywhere, and of all descriptions.

Large Watermelons.

By carefully pruning and protecting his vines, and allowing one or two melons to ripen on each vine, a Georgia farmer succeeds in getting watermelons weighing sixty pounds and more. One growing melon weighed sixty-five pounds, and was expected to reach seventy or seventy-five pounds by the time it was fully ripe. These melons bring from fifty cents to a dollar each at the nearest town. The secret of his success, he claims, is in judicious pruning, an art to be learned only by experience.

Miller Jim's Daughter.

"Yes, that's the old mill over there. Kind of purty and romantic-looking, aint it? But it seems awful lonesome to us folks as knew it full of life and just piling in the grist all day long. That there water-wheel didn't stop for repairs in them days ; it just buzzed along all the time, and the teams stood all around, and you'd see the boys comin' up the hill ridin' an old mare, with a great sack of grain thrown over her instead of a saddle—trit-trot, trit-trot, and a half grown, barefooted boy on her neck—folks allus sent a boy to the mill in those days, if they had one. And you see that there old house ? There's where Miller Jim and his darter lived. We boys used to cast sheep's eyes over at that door, I tell you, and when she'd come and look out kind of unconscious like and purtend not to see us, but shade her eyes with her hand and look way down the valley, it was just as if an angel from Heaven had lit down there. Purty ? Why, there wa'n't a chap in Sugar Valley that didn't think she was the handsomest gal in the world, and when she smiled on any of us with that kind of sort of sweet insinuatin' way she had, we'd just have walked on hot plowsheers for her and drawed lots for the privilege.

"What are you figurin' ? a sketchin' the ruin ? Well, ye don't see any ruin there, but that of the senseless wood and stone. The ruin was made by one of you painter chaps, darn his picter ! If I could have held his head in the mill-race for half an hour, I'd have died happy—and that's what makes me cry now like a poor, weak critter. I introduced him to her ; he was a moovin' round here gettin' sketches, as he called 'em, of the valley, and I may as well own up he was a nice, smart-looking, well-spoken chap, and paid his way liberally. He said he was only working for amusement, and so it turned out, and one day I told him he hadn't ever seen the prettiest picter in the place, and I said it was Miller Jim's darter, and he'd ought to see her. The next Sunday I was at the church and so was the painter chap, and we happened to sit together, and when the choir sang there was one voice that kind of carried the tune alone. I knew it well, and it made me tremble all over with happiness, and the stranger listened and says he, in a whisper, 'What a heavenly voice."

"Yes," says I, "and its her ; the one in the straw bonnet and white veil, the girl that's singin' air—that's Miller Jim's darter.

"After church nothing would do but I must introduce him—which I did, God forgive me,—and he walked by her and carried her book just as if he had allus known her, but then her father was with them, only he wasn't of any account, kind of shiftless, believed everybody honest, till he found them out, and then he would kinder apolgize for them, and he'd lend money as long as he had a penny in his pocket, if anyone made up a good story, and never locked a door, or took over toll, or made a sharp bargin : kind of witless or foolish, with a soft heart that allus kept him poor, though I don't know as he ever wanted anything much.

"Well beauty is a misfortune, if the grace of God doesn't go with it. Nobody suspicioned ennything wrong when all to oncet it came over us like a thunder-blast. The miller's girl was gone ; gone with the painter chap, but we never knew how or where. There was more than one of us that was goin' to ask Miller Jim about it, but when we come to look in his face we just didn't say anything. The miller was a changed man ; he'd allers had a smile and a pleasant word for us boys—he wasn't ever what you could call jolly, but he had his quiet little jokes—they were the same old ones over and over, but we expected 'em. Now, he had a look in his face as if something inside was dead ; and his lips that used to be kind of smiling and foolish, they were shut like a vise, and he never mentioned her name to living mortal.

"And he got sort o' absent-minded—forgot to take toll from a widow's grist—used to stop little children and kiss them or pat them on their heads, and there was allus a tear just falling from his eyes—cold, I 'spose, 'cause he didn't take any care of himself ; and then he took a good bit of notice of a little child—a pretty little mite of a girl—that lived near, and one day he see her leaning out of an upstairs window and he run over and told her mother she would fall mebbe, and get hurt ; the woman had an ugly temper and she says to him, says she : "I kin take care of my own children, that's more than you could do with yours !" and he looked at her sort of still and white for a moment and turned away ; the next day the mill warn't goin', nor the next, and on the third we looked, and found him in the race—but whether he slipped in or drowned himself of purpose, of course nobody can tell for sure. I've often looked into the faces of handsome wimmen I've seen since then, and tried to find one that favored that gal of Miller Jim's, but for right down sweetness and rale beauty I've never seen her equal, and how she could leave us all, as would have died for her, is more than I can conceit. That's a rale good picter you've got of the mill, but you can't see the hull of it—there's two people there, when I look at it, and one of them is—I wish I had the trick of painting a picture from memory—she—why there's something in my eyes—it's the dampness I guess—this mill air allus does affect me just so."—Detroit Free Post.

Husbands and Wives.

A good husband makes a good wife. Some men can neither do without wives nor with them : they are wretched alone in what is called single blessedness, and they make their home miserable when they get married ; they are like Tompkin's dog, which could not bear to be loose, and howled when it was tied up. Happy bacholors are like happy husbands, and a happy husband is the happiest of men. A well-matched couple carry a joyful life between them, as the two spies carried the cluster of Eschol. They are a brace of birds of Paradise. They multiply their joys by sharing them, and lessen their troubles by dividing them ; this is fine arithmetic. The waggon of care rolls lightly along as they pull together, and when it drags a little heavily, or there's a hitch anywhere, they love each other all the more, and so lighten the labor.

The doctors are now telling their creditors to call round after the gunning season has opened.

FACTS ABOUT BEARS.

Bear Ordinary no More Dangerous than a Woodchuck.

I rise for a few remarks on the bear. I have known bruin for the past forty years. I have met him on the trail in northern Michigan, Pensylvania, and the North Woods. I have seen him in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Ordinary bruin is about as dangerous as a raccoon or the festive woodchuck. But it does happen that the mother of any mammal will ignore danger to herself in defence of her young. Almost any animal will go wild and reckless of danger in defence of her young, and the bear is wonderful on muscle. Consequently, when a bear turns on her tormentors it is well to keep back about eighty-five and a half feet. She doesn't want to hurt anybody. She only wants to get her babes away from that fearful biped with the Derby hat and a dead rabbit cut on his hair.

If you humor her you are safe enough. If you want to put your hounds on her, making the escape of her cubs doubtful: well, you takes your choice." If you drive her to desperation and she has the grit to stand by her cubs, "better you stand a leedle back."

I have bagged a good deal of bear meat. I have been twice on a lone cruise in the North Woods. I saw several bears there—all intent on their own affairs.

So light was the danger from wild animals there, and so childish seemed the immense arrangements of the average tourist, that I came to leave not only my rifle, but my revolver behind. And I found the eight-ounce rod and the pocket hatcher all sufficient for defence against wild beasts. All the same, a she bear with cubs may be dangerous. I will give three instances that I can vouch for:

Forty years ago "Jim Steele," with a record of seven panthers, twenty-one bears, and 1,300 deer, resided at the mouth of "Asoph Run." He sent his son aged 14, up the creek for the cows one evening. The boy come back frightened and crying, saying that a big bear had chased and nearly caught him. Old Jim was disgusted at the boy's cowardice. Leaving his rifle he went back with the boy, and at the mouth of the Kennedy Run the boy commenced to say, "it was just here," when an immense bear jumped from under the bank, reared on her hind legs, and, showing all the teeth she had, growling, snarling, and threatening, made at the party. Old Jim took it in at once. "Jump on my back," he yelled to the youngster, which the boy did at once; and yelling, backing, and flourishing a knife, all the weapon he had, old Jim and the boy got away. Then they saw the mother bear cross the "riffle" on the creek and scatter up the mountain side, to be seen no more of men forever.

Thirty-two years ago, "Harry Ellis," born and bred on Pine Creek, guided a party to the huckleberry hills of the Barrens. While prospecting for the best berrying grounds he was suddenly confronted by an immense bear, which arose from behind a large fallen trunk, and, rearing on her hind legs, made directly at him, roaring, grunting, snarling, and showing her best array of teeth. Harry seized and flourished a pine knot, whooping and yelling at the top of his voice, as he ran backward at his best pace for a few rods only, when the bear turned and quickly conveyed her two cubs out of danger.

On the same range of hills I once went huckleberrying with Farmer T., his wife, and daughter on invitation. Our rig was a two-horse farm waggon, the bottom of the waggon packed with inverted tubs and buckets. Distance to the gr und, twenty-one miles.

By dint of starting at 3 a. m., and abusing the horses to unwonted speed, we were on the ground at 11 a. m., among the berries so plenty that the ground was absolutely hidden. It was a short job to pick a bushel of berries on such ground; but I had been there before, and I thought I knew a place about three-quarters of a mile westward, where the berries were equally plenty, but larger. So I took a large tin pail and started. Half way to the ground there is a gulch to be crossed, and this gully was badly blocked with fallen timber. When near the bottom I halted to select the best route for getting by or over some fallen trees that lay in my path, when a very large, dingy-looking "brown-nosed" bear sprang on a pine. sprang off again directly at me, got on her hind legs, and began to play the usual game of scare—showing all her teeth, making the savage, roaring, barking, growling noise common to enraged bears. On the instant I commenced a lively retrograde movement. Once I caught my heels and tumbled over backward, but got up suddenly. It was a Chinese fight. Growling, snarling, teeth and claws on one side; whooping, yelling, and pounding tinware on the other. Nobody hurt. Bear badly scared. As for myself, I wasn't scared a bit! As for the bear; it goes without saying that when she had played me off a few rods, she got down on all fours and took herself out with her cubs for all she was worth.—From the Forest and Stream.

How to Cool an Apartment.

A simple way of cooling the air of a room is described in the New Orleans Picayune of a recent date. The composing room of the Picayune is situated in the upper story of its publication house, just under the roof, and in summer is extremely hot. This season an inspiration seems to have come to one of the oppressed occupants, and in accordance with it a vertical wooden box was constructed in the corner of the room, with openings at the floor and ceiling, and furnished with a pipe for supplying water at the top, and a pan and drain at the bottom for receiving the flow and carrying it safely away. The supply pipe was bent over the upper end of the shaft, and fitted with a rose like that of a watering pot, so as to deliver a shower of spray instead of a solid stream. On connecting it with the service pipe, the movement of the water was found to cause an active circulation of the air in that part of the room, which was drawn in at the upper opening of the draft and issued again, cool and fresh, at the floor level. The most surprising thing about the experiment seems to have been the effect of the water in cooling the air to a degree much below its own temperature. With Mississippi water, which when drawn from the service pipe indicated a temperature of 84°, the air of the room, in which the thermometer at the beginning of the trial stood at 96°, was cooled in passing through the length of the shaft to 74°, or about 20° below the temperature at which it entered, and 10° below that of the water which was used to cool it. Of course the absorption of heat by the evaporation of a portion of the water accounts for its refrigerating effect, but the result seems to have been so easily and inexpensively attained that the experiment would be well worth repeating in other cases.

MURDERER OR MADMAN.

The Confession of Westgate to the Assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish.

A letter from Kingston, Jamaica, dated August 21, states: Westgate, alias Patrick O'Brien, the alleged murderer of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke, has been removed from her Majesty's ship Fantome to Spanishtown jail, as the Fantome was ordered to Barbados to take the place of her Majesty's ship Dido, now stationed at Port Royal. The prisoner (Westgate) is a man of ordinary build. He has a full and rather dark beard, about three inches in length all round, had nothing on his feet when on board the Fantome, and was dressed in blue trousers, jacket and slouched hat. He looked nervous, but would have easily been mistaken for one of the "tars" if at liberty. He still adheres to his former confessions. He has several time threatened suicide, and a close watch is kept over him to prevent any accident. He says that he left Dublin on the night of the assassination and proceeded by the night mail to Holyhead, and thence went to Cardiff, and from Cardiff he sailed in the Gladstone for Porto Cabello, where he was arrested by the British representative on his own confession. He says that the authorities at Porto Cabello treated him very harshly, and that he has been very kindly dealt with on board the Fantome. He was in a very dirty condition, and had to undergo a thorough washing when delivered to the officers of the Fantome. When asleep he is troubled with fearful dreams, and raves very excitedly. The doctor was called several times to ascertain what was wrong, and the ship and prison doctor affirm that he is suffering acutely from very intense excitement. He confessed to having returned before entering the car, and to having given Lord Frederick Cavendish a stab in the back, and that he was employed and paid £20 by Mr. O'Connor, member of Parliament, for his share in the deed. He says that his wife resides in Dublin, and that her father also lives there. He wrote a letter to his father-in-law, but not to his (prisoner's) wife. He is a hearty eater, and he is liberally supplied with all the necessities of life. He even got whiskey on board the Fantome when he called for it. He speaks with a strong Irish accent, and one night he called on a man named McColl, saying: "Well, Mr. McColl you have got your money and I have not got mine yet. I was on board the mail steamer and saw the Captain and postman, but I have not got my money yet."

He has revealed the names of his alleged accomplices to the authorities, but the names he gave are kept strictly secret. The general belief here is that he had something to do with the Phœnix Park murder, and this belief gains ground even although news has been published here stating that Westgate had sailed previous to the murder. The prisoner may not be Westgate, but it is certain he is either a murderer or a madman. One day while looking carelessly through the Sunday at Home magazine his eye caught the words. "The assassination of Lord Mayo,', and he jumped with fear and asked his keeper, "What's that?" He then turned over the leaves excitedly, and seemed to be lost with fear and excitement. No one is permitted to see Westgate in prison, unless those who have of necessity to see him.

The authorities here are waiting further orders for England. Meantime the prisoner is continuing to eat heavy meals, and his general appearance is that of a heartless, helpless witling.

The Catacombs of Rome.

Among the wonders of the metropolis of the world the catacombs or subterranean vaults and passages are certainly not the least. The first Christians, persecuted with atrocious cruelty by the pagan imperial government of Rome, sought refuge for safety, occasionally in the catacombs, and sometimes also that they might assemble without incurring suspicion, in large numbers, to instruct themselves in the doctrines of their new religion. These subterranean passages were also undoubtedly the resort of fugitive slaves and other miserable beings, who sought refuge from the tyrannical government of imperial Rome, over which have presided some of the direst monsters that ever existed—Nero, Caligula, Heliogabalus, and other despots in purple. Among these subterranean passages there are, it appears, different kinds. Some were constructed for the purpose of receiving the dead, others were used as water conduits, and supplied the city with rivers of fresh water for a population of two millions. The Cloaca Maxima, which led from Rome to the sea, is a famous example of many more smaller hidden roads, constructed by rich private individuals at an enormous expense, in which they could secrete themselves from the depredations of those greatest of all robbers. the Emperors, and in later times from the persecution and massacres of the barbarians. The soil upon which Rome is built, as well as that in its immediate neighborhood, offers great facilities to the excavator, being composed of volcanic clay, easy to pierce, yet sufficiently solid band impenetrable against damp to form a secure habitation. In fact, to this day many shepherds, with their flocks, lodge in these artificial caverns.

When an orchard requires fertilizing it is best to do this all over the ground and not to apply manure only near the trees. This produces a large growth of roots close to the trees, for roots grow where soil is richest. Orchards need lime and ashes more than manure, and these soon produce heathy, smooth bark.

An explosion of fire damp has occurred in a mine near Dortmund, Germany, and 20 persons were killed or injured.

Practical Hints for the Farmer.

LATE SOWN RYE FOR SPRING FODDER.

There are differences of opinion as to the value of late sown rye as a crop for early spring feeding. These differences are almost entirely due to the circumstances of the soil and season. Should the soil be poor the rye crop, like any other, will be poor, and should the season close in with hard freezing soon after sowing, the plants will not have made sufficient roots to save them from injury. If, on the other hand, the soil is rich and mellow, and the sowing is done so early that strong, well rooted plants may form, then a profitable crop may be expected. The writer has seen most satisfactory results obtained by plowing under a sod—previously well manured—in late autumn, and the ground sown to rye. In the spring this field yielded a heavy growth of fine green fodder, which was used to feed a flock of sheep and other small stock. After this pasturage was over the rye "stubble" was turned under with a heavy coat of manure, and the field planted to corn. In this case the rye was what is termed a stolen crop. Some portion of the field was clay and the additional tillage had a good effect upon the mechanical conditions of the soil. The green crop thus produced came in at just that time in the spring when a supply of fodder of this kind is of special value—the pastures not having fully started and the dry stored food being limited in quantity and of high price.

NOTES ON LIVE STOCK.

The horses of the farm should be called upon for hard work this month. Plowing and other field work is a steady pull upon horse-flesh throughout the month, and to get good work we must feed well. Many horses cannot work on new grain (corn, oats or barley) unless it is thoroughly dried. It will get dry in time by ordinary exposure, but enough may be dried for daily use by artificial means, and often with the best results. Young stock and pigs may have nubbins and soft corn, but do not feed the work or road horses with such stuff. Take good care of old horses; a horse sound at fifteen years is worth two colts; give him good feed and pasturage, and steady work on the farm. The younger horses may do on the road, but take care of the old servants for steady work. They will repay the care. Farm horses are not half groomed as a rule. There are no surer safeguards against disease than regular feeding and watering, and thorough grooming.

Cows.—There is an abundance of feed for milch cows this month on farms where roots form a prominent crop. The tops of beets, mangels, rutabagas and carrots, to say nothing of cabbages, are exceedingly well relished, and are excellent milk feed. This is one of the best months for cows to calve, because provision may be made for having so much good feed at little cost. Everywhere within a hundred miles of a large city, or within the proper "milk radius" of any town, milk is worth much more in winter than in summer, and should be produced.

Veal.—Fall calves rarely get the size that spring calves do, because they cannot have so much milk, but by using a little milk, and that skimmed, after the second week, they will do very well on hay tea and boiled linseed-cake gruel, to which some milk is added. They must be gradually accustomed to this diet, but will thrive upon it and make excellent veal at six or eight weeks old.

Sheep.—Ewes bred in October, "yean" in March—rather early, except upon farms which can make early lambs a specialty. Sheep make as good manure as any farm stock, and whoever has much wheat straw should consider what better use he can make of it than to buy up some cheap sheep if he can find them, and winter them chiefly on straw, with a very little hay, and corn enough to coat their ribs well before spring, when they can be turned off at "cost and expenses," with a fine lot of manure for clear profit on the investment.

Pigs for slaughter should be confined and not allowed to forage for a living. They will fatten rapidly on little food. Small potatoes boiled, with a little meal added, will push them forward so that advantage may be taken of the market in case prices advance, or so that they will be well protected by fat against cold snaps should they come suddenly. It is truly said that nubbins will go further in October than sound corn in November.

Brood sows should have the range of the orchards, where the wind-falls and grubs will furnish a good part of their food, and warm snug shelters where they can lie together during storms and keep one another warm.

Poultry.—There is always a time early in November, or before, when well fattened poultry will sell for much more than fowl of the same quality will at Christmas. In fact, if the weather during next month be raw and cold, pigs and poultry may be fed well and not only not gain at all in weight, but not sell for as much as they would bring now. After the holidays, prices begin to advance again. When poultry are once fat, to keep them so at little cost they must be kept warm, fed at least three times a day, and always have fresh water.

Laying fowls should have warm quarters, well lighted—supplied with dust boxes, by which the whole establishment may be made intolerably dusty in every corner—fed twice a day—soft feed with a little meat at 10 o'clock, and hard grain at dusk, with a good range, and plenty of pure water.

KEEPING GRAPES.

In keeping grapes, the first essential is a grape that will keep. The varieties differ greatly in this respect, the one most cultivated, the Concord, being the poorest keeper. Catawba, Diana, Iona, and Isabella, are among the best keepers. These do not succeed everywhere, but in localities where they will do well, they are still among the most profitable. The generally popular Delaware keeps better than the Concord, but not so long as those mentioned. To have grapes keep in the best condition, they must be carefully handled, as the broken skin of a single berry will cause decay to set in. The usual method is to pack the fruit in wooden boxes, holding three or five pounds. These boxes are made at all the grape centres. While paste-board boxes will answer for grapes that are to be sold at once, wooden ones are required for those to be kept. To keep well, the fruit must be thoroughly ripe. An experienced eye will at once by way the manner in which the cluster hangs from the vine, if the fruit is ripe. The stalk by which the cluster is attached loses its stiffness, and the bunch hangs directly down. Handling the fruit removes the bloom, and injures its appearance, hence the bunch should always be held by the stem. The implement stores have scissors which hold the cluster after it is cut, and all handling is avoided. The fruit is picked, is placed in shallow trays or boxes, these are conveyed to the fruit house, and stacked up in such a manner that the air will circulate among them. Large vineyards have special fruit houses, these are built like an ice-house, with double walls filled in with saw-dust, and a stove is provided to use in severe weather. In the absence of such a house a room in the dwelling or in an out-building may be used. The object is to keep the temperature uniform and as cool as may be, without freezing. There should be abundant ventilation, and the direct sunlight excluded. The grapes in these trays will "cure" in a few days, that is, the skin will become toughened and the stems less rigid. When cured, they may be packed in boxes, or they may be left in the trays until marketed. Some growers pack at once, as soon as the fruit is in proper condition, and keep it in the boxes until it is sent off. The boxes are opened at the bottom and the bunches laid in, taking care to select such clusters as will pack closely; they should be so full that some pressure will be required in nailing on the bottom. The label of the grower is placed upon the top of the box, either before or after packing. The care as to temperature already mentioned must be observed with the fruit after it is packed. Put up in this manner many tons of grapes reach markets just before the holidays. For grapes that are sold as soon as ripe, various kinds of paper or wooden packages are used, according to the preference of the market to which they are sent.

A PROTECTION FROM FROSTS.

A cold snap usually comes in early autumn, after which there are weeks of the finest days in the year. It therefore pays to take some pains to protect the more tender plants during two or three frosty nights, that their bloom may be enjoyed afterwards. A light sheet, or even newspapers spread over beds of geraniums, coleus, etc., will save them, A group of cannas may in this way be kept in its beauty, while, if left unprotected. the luxuriant growth is cut down by the frost, and soon becomes unsightly. Any one who has gone to all the care and toil of bringing a fine bed of tender plants to perfection, should certainly use every precaution to preserve the plants as long as possible.

A Texas Goat Ranch.

The editor of the Uvaide Hesperian made a visit to the famous Nueces Canon, including the Angora ranch of S. J. Arnold & Bros. Here the canon widens out for a distance of seven miles — in fact, it is the widest and most beautiful spot in the canon. These gentlemen own and control about 15,000 acres, embracing the rich valleys of the Maverick Creek on the west and Ranch Creek on the east, which are only miniature canons putting into the Nueces Valley from either side, furnishing an abundance of grass and water the year round, and which is used as a summer range, while in Kinney County they have another ranch where they winter their sheep until after the lambing season, keeping the goats on the home ranch during the kidding season. Six years ago these gentlemen commenced with 875 goats and 1,400 head of sheep. And now they have 4,000 of the former and 8,000 of the latter. Their losses in sheep will amount to about the same in money value as their purchases, while on the goat question they are $2,000 ahead of their losses, besides their increase. During this period their losses from disease and otherwise have not been over 2 per cent. on their goats. They run seven different flocks, which give steady employment to seven herders, besides a viciero (who superintends the flocks), as well as extra hands to attend to other work on the ranch. In the shearing, lambing, and dipping seasons of course the number is greatly augmented. On this ranch the goats have been improved up by the best of thoroughbred billies until the grades run from one-half to fifteen-sixteenths. Last spring their goat clip amounted to 1,200 pounds, which was sold in New York at an average of 40 cents. We have often heard the question asked, what profit is there in goats? In common goats the profit lies in the hides and tallow, which always command a good price, and the supply of good meat in shape that will not spoil in warm weather before it can be used up. By using Angora sires a flock can be graded up so high that the wool is more profitable than that of sheep, where the animal itself is hardier, more prolific, and less expensive.—*Galveston (Tex.) The Matter With the Telephone.

"I doan' know vhat I shall do mit dat telephone of mine," observed a citizen as he entered the headquarters of the company yesterday and sat down in a discouraged way.

"Out of order, is it?"

"Sometimes it vhas, and sometimes it vhas all right. If I go to speak mit der coal man, or der City Hall, or der butcher, it vhas all right, und I can hear every word. If somepody vhants to order my peer I get de name shust as plain as daylight."

"And when does it fail?"

"Vhell, shust like two hours ago. A saloon man he owes me $18, and I rings him oop und calls out, 'Hello! hello! I likes dot monish to-hay!' Den he vhants to know who I am, und he says he can't catch der name. Another Broken Neck Cured.

About five months ago a teamster named John Collery attempted to drive his team through a barn door, and in doing so had his head forced down upon his breast until his neck was broken. Police Surgeon Stambaugh made an examination of the injured man, and found that his seventh cervical vertebra was fractured, and that the spinal cord had been stretched out nearly two inches.

After his removal to his home, Collery states that he was laid flat on his back with a sort of fence about his neck and head which kept him immoveable for over two months. Both the body of the vertebra and the arching laminæ were discovered to be broken, and the operation of joining them together without pinching the spinal cord where it had sagged between the ragged edges as described is one of the most difficult ever performed. For a month the patient lay on his back, completely paralyzed in one-half of his body, and with but little feeling in the other. If he moved in the slightest degree during the first fortnight he could plainly feel the jagged edges of the bone grate together, and for hours after such an attempt he was content to lie on his hard bed without attempting to move a muscle for fear that the spinal cord should be crushed, and his existence ended in a twinkling.

The straightest position attainable was required, and to this end Dr. Stambaugh was compelled to refuse him a mattress, forcing him to lie on a wide plank. Collery says that before his eight weeks of enforced quietness was ended he thought the board was made of adamant. The most dangerous time experienced, he says, was one day when an attendant told him that a man whose neck could stand breaking as his had was not born to be hanged. His desire to laugh was irresistible, and the shaking up his merriment gave him caused his fastenings to burst, and the fracture came near breaking afresh. During the first five weeks he did not move a foot from the first posture.

The paralysis has now almost entirely disappeared, and Dr. Stambaugh yesterday promised him that he would be able to go work within six months. The average fatality in cases of clearly defined fracture of the spine is estimated at 999 in 1,000.

Fishing for Rats.

A novel mode of catching rats is thus described in the American Angler. The writer says that a person having the patience of most fishermen can have much sport in hooking the vermin.

The warehouse adjoining his place of business is infested by these "file-tales," and our friend may be seen in the early spring and late fall, on an occasional evening just after dusk, seated at the back window of his counting room (overlooking the yard of the warehouse), with an ordinary rod in hand, strong linen line, and a spring hook, commonly called a "sockdolager," baited with a lump of fresh beef, patiently waiting for a bite. It does not tarry long nor does it consume itself in nibbles, but with a hungry snap the bait is seized and the hooks of the sockdolager impales the rat, when the excitement commences.

A lusty rat is no mean antagonist at the end of a pliant pole and ten feet of line, and his plunges, twistings, and straight-away dashes are more perplexing to the angler than the leaps, surges, and sulkings of the gamy trout or bass. The rat is generally landed, after seasonable sport, and killed by a blow from a bludgeon.

In this connection we may state that thousands of small hooks are bought by sugar refiners for ratting purposes. The hooks are baited with small pieces of beef on each, and then distributed about the building. The rats swallow beef and hook—the first is digested, the latter is not—death of course results. The remedy is said to be infallible.

Treatment of Diphtheria.

The Medical Press says that Dr. Deuker, who, during twenty-four years of very extensive practice in the Children's Hospital, St. Petersburg, has treated upward of two thousand cases of diphtheria, and tried all the remedies, both internal and external, employed in this affection, has obtained the best results from the following method, which he has employed for the last ten years. As soon as the white spots appear on the tonsils he gives a laxitive mainly composed of senna, which produces an abundant evacuation. When the purgative effect has ceased he gives cold drinks, acidulated with hydrochloric acid, and every two hours a gargle composed of lime water and hot milk in equal parts. Dr. Deuker affirms that when this treatment is commenced early it is generally and rapidly successful.

The Cradle of the Bootblack.

New York lays claim to be the place where the street bootblack first appeared, but Boston says the professional bootblack is essentially an institution of the "Hub." The Traveller of the latter city says at first the business was associated with window-washing, chimney-sweeping, clothes cleaning and waiting and tending. In time, however, it became a distinct branch, and many of the bootblacks of that day acquired a handsome independence and became real estate holders. The custom then was to call at the homes of the gentry, take the boots and shoes, string them on long poles and carry them to their respective places of business, polish and return them at an early hour the next day. These poles would hold a dozen or more pairs, and it was a novel sight to see the bootblacks passing to and fro.

England has no conception of really good coffee. That is the conclusion of the London Times. Adulterations by dealers and the unskilfulness of cooks combine to produce a beverage that is not what it ought to be. Englishmen can order the best Mocha coffee; they can be served with something which bears the name; they can pay highly for it; they can do everything but get it, and this, we are assured, they never do. All the best coffee which the Yemen district produces is kept for use in the East. Before it moves westward it has been carefully picked over, and the choicest berries have been extracted from it. It is only what remains after this process has been again and again gone through that ever reaches England.

METHODIST UNION.

The question of union of the several Methodist bodies of this Dominion was one of the main questions before the General Conference in session at Hamilton, the past three weeks, and is no doubt interesting to all, more or less. We give below the report of the Union Committee.

The Committee appointed by the General Conference to consider the question of a union with the several branches of Methodism in this Dominion, viz., the Methodist Church of Canada, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada, the Premitive Methodist Church, Bible Christian Church, beg to submit the following report:—Your Committee, in accordance with instructions received from the General Conference, has met the several committees appointed by the other Churches above named, with the view to ascertain if such a general union is practicable, and what modification, if any, of the existing economy of the various churches would be regarded as essential in any proposed basis of union. We found the brethern composing the above-named Committee ready to co-operate cordially in the endeavour to reach a common understanding in reference to term of union, and by a hearty and unanimous vote the discipline of the Methodist Church of Canada was accepted as a basis of negotiations. At the same time it was felt that no union could be lasting or benificial which does not carry with it the general consent of the membership of the churches represented, and that to secure this some mutual concessions would be necessary. In regard to doctrines, general rules, usages, and constitution of the lower courts, no difference of opinion was expressed. In regard to the General Conference there were two points in which certain concessions were desirable, viz., General Superintendency and lay representation in the annual conference. The representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church express themselves as attaching great importance to the principals of Superintendency, but not in the particular form in which it has hitherto existed among them. They were of opinion that the church which they represented would yield the life appointments and seperate ordination, but would stand firmly by the principle of an Itinerant Superintendancy in some form, leaving the powers and functions of the office an open question. The representatives of Primitive Methodist and Bible Christian Churches while not advocating superintendency per se, expressed themselves as willing to accept the principle in order to promote a general union, provided that the other bodies would concede the principle of lay representation in all our Church courts be so recognized as to admit laymen into one annual Conference to some extent, and in some form. 2nd. The paragraph 86, page 39, of the discipline referring to the election by the general conference of its President be so amended as to provide for an Itinerant General Superintendency in some form. In reference to the former resolution, it was distinctly understood that the lay representation in the Annual Conference was not to affect the composition of the Stationing Committee or the examination of ministerial character. Your Committee having carefully considered the whole subject, in view of the desirableness of a United Methodist in Canada would venture to earnestly recommend the General Conference to adopt the above resolutions. It further recommends that the General Conference direct the appointment of a mixed Committee consisting of 27 persons, viz.:—Seven by the Toronto Conference, seven by the London Conference, five by the Montreal Conference, three by the Nova Scotia Conference, New Brunswick, and by the Newfoundland Conference to meet the Committee of the other bodies in the City of Toronto on the last Tuesday in November. The church in which the meeting shall be held and the hour of meeting to be arranged by the Toronto Conference. It further recommends that the members of the above named Committee be elected by the representatives of the several annual Conferences here present, and that said committee meet for orgazination before the rising of the General Conference. It still further recommends that should the Joint Committee agree as to the details of a basis of union. The plan of union agreed upon shall be submitted to the Quarterly Boards for approval or otherwise at the next February quarterly meeting.

It is further recommended that when the superintendents of circuits be required to report immediately to the Secretary of the General Conference the vote of the quarterly meetings, and should it be found that two-thirds of the quarterly meeting voting thereon have declared in favour of the plan of union proposed by the Joint Committee, the President of the General Conference shall convene the General Conference in order to give effect to the proposed union, said meeting of the General Conference to be held subsequently to the meeting of the Annual Conference. It further recommended that when the General Conference adjourn it adjourn to meet at the call of the chair. All of which is respectfully submitted, WM. WILLIAMS, Chairman. W. C. BROWN, Secretary.

The report was received and ordered to be printed.

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as Carcharodon Rondeletii. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:
It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. The Presbyterian Ladies' Association gave a hot dinner in the town hall on Fair Day, in connection with their annual bazaar, which was a grand success, and was followed by an entertainment in the evening, which was well attended. The proceeds amounted to the handsome sum of $140.

W. J. Bellamy, Clerk.

FLESHERTON STATION.

An addition of 420 feet of siding has been built at this station.

Went Without Orders.—On Saturday last a car, on which was loaded timber for cattle-grards, became detached from a train at this station and left without orders, going towards Owen Sound. Mr. Scott, carpenter on the line, was on the car at the time, but there being no breaks on the car he was powerless to stop it, and being down grade it soon gained considerable speed. As it is mostly down grade from here to Markdale, in fact to Owen Sound, the car continued to increase its speed until it reached twelve miles an hour. In the meantime the fireman and two brakesmen started with the engine in pursuit, not waiting for driver, conductor or orders. They passed the Markdale section men about four miles from here in hot pursuit, the runaway having passed a short time previous. They, however, captured the car on the fly about 1½ miles south of Markdale and returned, no harm having been done.

The best reason yet advanced for having Monday washing day the next day after Sunday is because cleanliness is next to godliness.

The old-fashioned preacher used to claim that he had a call to preach. The modern preacher must hear the sound of the salary before he can regard the call.

Merse, who invented the telegraph, and Bell, the inventor of the telephone, both had deaf mute wives, which leads a wag to observe; "Just see what a man can do, when every thing is quiet."

A REALIZED HOPE.

O dear, it's very hard indeed to sit here patiently
And see that heartless little girl eat chicken for her tea!
She don't know how to take a hint, for I have said "Bow-wow,"
And no one could look [illegible] than I am looking now.

It surely is a [illegible]-stick that she's holding in her hand.
If I had that, I'd be the happiest puppy in the land.
I wonder [illegible] my nose.
I'd yelp out if I dared, but it would never do, I s'pose.

Ma had some meat like that one day, and I gnawed it, but since then,
She's watched me, and I've never had a single chance again.
I've dreamed of it sometimes!—yap!—yap!—
'Twould move a heart of stone,
That I'm too old for bread and milk, and yet too young for bone.

Perhaps if I should come up near, and play a little trick,
My mistress would throw down a bite; but no!
—"'Twill make him sick,"—
That's what she always says, and she laughs at my big head and feet.
'Twould serve her right if I should go and get lost in the street.

I look so young, she often says,—as if she didn't, too!—
There comes a bone! I whined so hard, I do believe she knew.
My, what a nose! With teeth like that, a pug like me deserves
Something beyond such trashy stuff as pickles and preserves.

DE LESSEPS' CANAL.

Sharp Argument to Show that Panama and Suez Widely Differ.

It is often taken for granted that because M. de Lesseps severed the Isthmus of Suez he must also succeed in severing that of Panama. But the ditch which he dug in the sand from Port Said to Suez cannot be for a moment compared to the channel which he has undertaken to hew through the rocks and swamps of Panama. The new canal will only be half as long as the old one, but, as it passes through a mountain range necessitating a clean cut 350 feet deep through solid rock, the difficulty of its construction cannot be estimated by its length. In Africa the River Nile was of invaluable service to M. de Lesseps. In America after the earthquakes, his greatest enemy is the River Charges, whose turbulent torrent, unless curbed by a dam the like of which has never been constructed by engineer, is certain to destroy the canal the first rainy season. In Suez he was close to the overstocked labor market of three continents, and in the immediate neighborhood of the workshops of the world. In Panama he has to import negroes from Jamaica and coolies from China. All his machinery has to be transported thousands of miles from Europe or America. But even in Suez he would probably have failed had it not been for the lavish support of the late Khedive and the powerful patronage of Napoleon III. The Colombian Government has no resources to place at his disposal, and the undisguised jealousy of the United States will probably lead to the construction of a competing canal with an American guarantee. Yet, even if we accept the Suez precedent, it is far from reassuring for the holders of Panama stock. When M. de Lesseps began to make the Suez Canal he estimated its cost at little more than £7,000,00. Before it was opened it cost little less than £20,000,000. M. de Lesseps estimates the cost of cutting the Panama Canal at £26,000,000. At the Suez rate it will not be completed at much below £60,-000,000. At present he has raised £6,000,-000, not including the money required to purchase the railroad. There is only one point more to which we need advert to-day. At Suez M. de Lesseps has a monopoly of the traffic, whereas the Foreign Affairs Committee of the American House of Representatives has already reported in favor of a bill incorporating a company with a Government guarantee to cut a maritime canal through Nicaragua. There may be traffic enough to pay for making one canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but what prospect is there of a dividend if there are two?

About Waltzing.

Some time since Mrs. General Sherman wrote a book about dancing in which she took strong ground on waltzing as being positively immoral. She said she would never allow a daughter of hers to be embraced in public in the way permitted by the customs of the day. Now comes to the front a Philadelphia dancing-master who announces that he will no longer teach the fashionable waltzes to young people. He is endeavoring to reintroduce dances like the old minuets and quadrilles. Undoubtedly the modern fashionable waltz does permit a closeness of embrace which is startling to one's notions of propriety; but then custom and convention goes for a great deal in this world. In the East, it is immodest for a woman to go into the streets unveiled or to allow her face to be seen by a man not a member of her family. Queen Victoria will not allow any lady to be presented personally to her unless in a dress cut very low in the neck, and yet the British Queen is very strict in her notions of propriety. There is one real objection to modern dancing; the middle-aged and elderly cannot participate in it. None but the very young can stand the violent exertions of the redowas, polkas and galops of the ball-rooms of the period. To be really innocent and harmless, amusements should be suitable for all ages, and be participated in by the fathers and mothers as well as by the sons and daughters.

When the wind blows over Mt Washington at the rate of 108 miles an hour, as it did the other day, those who are up in the world wish themselves down.

Boston lovers now write their love letters in cypher, and when the old man finds a note reading "No 5—before—x—18—page 21—A. B. C.—17," he drops it like a hot potato.

It is estimated that the teeth undergo as many as ten changes of temperature in twenty-four hours, and the wonder is that anybody over 15 years old has anything left to chew with.

That water-cure New York doctor who discovered that indigestion was caused by weak eyes, has suddenly lost his practice. It is a long ways from the eyes to the stomach.

HOUSEHOLD RECEIPTS.

Canning and Preserving Late Fruits and Vegetables.

NEW METHOD OF PRESERVING [illegible].—Beat well together equal quantities [illegible] and [illegible] into this [illegible] closely [illegible] keep them [illegible] from the [illegible] gathered [illegible] first [illegible] immediate use.

GREEN CORN.—When the corn is a little past the tenderest roasting-ear state, pull it; take off one thickness of the husk, tie the rest of the husk down at the silk end in a close and tight manner. Place them in a clean cask or barrel, compactly together, and put on a brine to cover the same of about two-thirds the strength of meat pickle. When ready to use in winter, soak in cold water over night, and if this does not appear sufficient, change the water and freshen still more. This is said to be excellent, and to very much resemble the fresh article from the stock.

RIPE TOMATOES.—Tomatoes may be kept almost any length of time and come out as fresh as when first pickled by preserving in pure vinegar diluted with water—one gill of vinegar and two of water. Pick when ripe, but not very soft; leave the stems on, but do not break the skin. Put into wood or stone, and put the liquid on them cold. After you get through putting them in, place something on them to keep them under the liquid, and take out as you may wish to use them. Can use them as you would tomatoes fresh from the vine. This will not fail if your vinegar is pure and diluted according to directions. It is highly probable that cucumbers might be preserved in the same way—selecting those of medium size, and leaving on the stems.

A NEW WAY TO DRY PEACHES.—Never peel peaches to dry. Let them be mellow enough to be in good condition, put them in boiling water for a moment or two, and the skins will come off like a charm. Let them be in the water long enough, but no longer. The gain is at least six-fold—saving of time in removing the skin, saving of the peach, the best part at that, and it takes less time to dry the peaches, as a whole bushel may be scalded in a boiler at once, and the water turned off. Dry as rapidly as possible in a cool oven if you have not an evaporator.

TO DRY SWEET APPLES.—Bake as for the table, then dry in a brick oven. They may be soaked, heated, water dried away, and restored very nearly to the condition of a fresh baked apple. Stewed in more syrup, they make a much richer sauce than the common dried apples.

TO DRY SWEET CORN.—Pick early in the morning; throw in boiling water—having first removed the husks and silk—let it remain five minutes, then shave and scrape from the cob, and spread on boards in the sun, and cover with glazed sashes slightly raised—the hot-bed sash, if you have one. When perfectly dry, scald in a moderate oven with paper over it. Put into perfectly tight paper bags, tie up closely, and put in a dry place. When wanted for use, look over but do not wash, put on the stove with four or five times its bulk of water, and let it soak three or four hours, boiling slowly fifteen or twenty minutes at the best.

TO CAN GREEN CORN.—To every six quarts of corn take one ounce of tartaric acid dissolved in boiling water. Cut the corn from the cob and put in sufficient water to cook. When the corn is cooking, put in the water and seal in air-tight cans. When you wish to use it, pour off the water from it, put in fresh water and a small quantity of soda, let it stand for twenty minutes to a half-hour before cooking. When nearly cooked, season as you would corn fresh from the garden.

TEXAN METHOD OF PREPARING GREEN GRAPES.—The grapes must not be too old; the best time is just before the seed begins to harden. They are, after being picked and freed from stems, put into bottles (wide neck bottles) so as nearly to fill the latter. These are then filled with fresh clean water. After this they are all placed in a large kettle, partially filled with cold water, and the temperature nearly raised to the boiling point. As soon as sufficiently heated, they are taken off; enough water poured out of each bottle to allow a well-fitting cork to be pressed in tightly. Then make air-tight with sealing-wax or common beeswax. As the bottles cool down a partial vacuum is left in the neck of each. Grapes thus preserved have kept for years in Texas, where canned fruit almost invariably spoils during the hot summer.

They can at any time be opened and prepared like fresh grapes, and no difference will be found in the taste. It is better to use the water also in which they are kept, as it contains a large percentage of tartaric acid, which gives them the pleasant sour taste.

CANNING GRAPES.—Concords are best for this purpose. Cook the pulps thoroughly, strain in colander or sieve to remove the seed, then boil the pulp and skins together one-half to three-quarters of an hour, not less; adding sugar to taste. Use ordinary stone jars, filling full; smear the top of the jar with hot wax made of equal parts of rosin and tallow, then stretch over the top new cotton sheeting, tying around the jar about an inch or two from the top with a cord wound around several times, then cover the top with a layer of melted wax, and set in a cool place; will keep until the next summer.

For grape jelly, the grapes should not be quite ripe.

HOW TO PRESERVE GRAPES.—It is said grapes may be kept fresh for months prepared as follows:

Take good bunches, free from decayed or imperfect berries, and hang them by threads to sticks, across the edge of a clean wooden box, deep enough to hold the bunches without touching the bottom. Hang the bunches close together, but without touching each other. Then take fine poplar, oak, birch, or maple sawdust, clean and free from moisture, but not over dried, and pour it into the boxes, working it with a small rod among the bunches until they are completely enveloped.

When the box is filled, seal the ends of all the exposed main stalks with a drop of rosin or or sealing-wax. Cover the box first with a sheet of newspaper, and then with the cover, and store in a dry cellar.

[illegible] CANNED TOMATOES.—Procure fine ripe, smooth specimens; cut in [illegible] put in the frying pan very sweet lard [illegible] hot drop in the tomatoes [illegible] down; when nearly done [illegible] add [illegible] hot water to the juice in [illegible] the cans as full as possible with [illegible] and seal hermetically. If there [illegible] air-hole [illegible] spoils more quickly. When wanted [illegible] use, pour off [illegible] grease, lay on a plate, season and cook until brown in a small quantity of melted butter. Add cream for gravy. By this method they can be had all winter, and are just as good as when fresh.

CANNED PLUMS.—Select perfect fruit, and to every pound of plums allow half the quantity sugar, if they are very ripe or light colored; moisten the sugar with water, and put in a preserving kettle over the fire, removing the scum as it rises, and when boiling add the fruit, setting on the back of the stove, where the plums will get heated through and the juice begin to run before boiling. As soon as they boil up once, take from the stove and bottle immediately, keeping as whole as possible.

APPLES KEPT IN WINTER.—Several statements have been published of the entire success which has attended the keeping of winter apples under water. The experiment is worth repeating, observing the precaution of keeping the temperature nearly down to the freezing point. The advantages of this practice are, first, the exclusion of air current; and secondly, a temperature not liable to fluctuations, or which cannot quickly change. So long as the water can be kept cold the fruit will be likely to remain sound; if too warm the skin will swell and crack by an over-absorption of moisture. Grapes have been successfully kept in the same way, the water remaining near freezing. A damp cellar, for the fruit on shelves, is better than one say as to cause shriveling, provided it is cold. If warm, decay would be likely to commence soon.

TOMATOES FOR WINTER USE.—Scald and remove the skin, and boil them down so that one bushel of tomatoes will be contained in a one gallon jug. Stir gently while boiling, and when nearly boiled down enough add one tablespoonful of salt. Heat the jug to a boiling temperature and put in the tomatoes until it is full; then cork tightly, and tie a piece of cloth nicely over the top of the jug and completely cover the top of the jug with wax. These tomatoes when wanted for use, must be much diluted with water, one teacupful making a meal for a good-sized family.

DRYING EGGS FOR WINTER USE.—The eggs are beaten to uniform consistency and spread out in thin cakes on butter-plates. This dries them into a thin paste, which is to be packed into close cans, and sealed. When required for use, the paste can be dissolved in water, and beaten to a foam like fresh eggs. It is said eggs can be preserved for years this way and retain their flavor.—Demorest's Monthly.

Properties of Nitro-Glycerine.

It has a sweet, aromatic, pungent taste, and possesses the very peculiar property of causing an extremely violent headache when placed in a small quantity upon the tongue, or any portion of the skin, particularly upon the wrists. It has long been employed by homœopathic practioners as a remedy in certain kinds of headaches. In those who work much with it, the tendency to headache is generally overcome, though not always. It freezes at about 40° Fahr. If perfectly pure—that is, if the washing has been so complete as to remove all traces of the acid—it can be kept for an indefinite period of time; and, while many cases of spontaneous decomposition have occurred in impure specimens, there has never been known such an instance, where the proper care has been given to all the details of the manufacture.

When pure, nitro-glycerine is not very sensitive to friction, or even to moderate percussion; if a small quantity be placed on an anvil and struck with a hammer, that portion which is struck explodes sharply, but so quickly as to drive away the other particles; if, however, it were even slightly confined, so that none could escape, it would all explode or detonate. It must be fired by a fuse containing fulminate of mercury (the compound used in percussion-caps) not being either readily or certainly fired by gunpowder, the shock of the latter not being sufficently quick or sharp to detonate the nitroglycerine. It is highly probable that in this case, as in that of other high explosives, the vibrations set up by the fulminate (which is no stronger than gunpowder) are of just such a character as to find an answering chord, so to speak, in the explosive which most readily causes the explosion of another body. For instance, nitro-glycerine is much more powerful than fulminate of mercury, yet seventy grains of it will not explode gun-cotton, while fifteen grains of the weaker fulminate will readily do so. The fuse generally used, then, for firing nitro-glycerine, is composed of some fifteen or twenty grains of fulminate, and this quantity is sufficient to detonate a large mass as well as a small one.

If flame be applied to nitro-glycerine it will not explode, but burn with comparative sluggishness. When frozen it is very difficult and uncertain of firing. If the material is perfectly pure, it forms, upon detonation, a volume of gases nearly thirteen hundred times as great as that of the original liquid; these gases are also further expanded, by the heat developed, to a theoretical (though not practical) volume ten thousand times as great as that of the charge. Practically speaking, the forces exerted by gunpowder [illegible] nitro-glycerine [illegible] the proportion of one to eight.—ALLAN D. B[illegible] Popular [illegible] Monthly.

There is danger that the Salvation Army may have a serious rival in religious works, and one that will not have the same extravagant features that mark the battalions of Gen. Booth. Laymen who style themselves the Church Army have been holding services near Bristol and Lancashire with considerable success, and what is called a Church Parochial Mission Society, aiming to promote "aggressive mission work," has been formed, with the two Archbishops, besides several Bishops as patrons.

The inhabitants of Corsica have provided strong proof that they could exterminate the bandits of their country if they desired to, but refrain because they have no sympathy for the foreigners who are plundered. Antonio Batistolli had long been a terror to travellers, and nothing was done to hinder him, but when he began to rob peasants his death was promptly determined on. A lynching party was organized, he was cornered in a tavern, and several bullets ended him.

Sixteen years ago George T. Reynolds, a stock raiser at Griffin, Texas, was wounded in a skirmish with Indians, an arrow entering the abdomen and passing through the abdominal cavity. Such a wound is almost invariably fatal; but he pulled the shaft of the arrow out, and although the head broke off and remained in the body, he astonished everybody by recovering within ten days. A few days ago he felt pain in the back, near the spine, and a surgical operation brought to the surface the steel arrow head that had taken sixteen years to work its way through his body.

A writer describing Newmarket fifty years ago, says: "Its staple trade is blood horses; its inhabitants, for the most part, jockeys and gamblers; its language that of Tattersall's; its business an endless succession of matches on the race course, in the cock pit, the tennis court, on the billiard table or the card table. About 300 horses are trained every year. From $2,500 to $10,000 is a common price. Now and again $20,000 is given. Nearly every one in the town bets more or less. Even the children learn to lisp the pedegree of horses, the long odds, and the merits of jockeys." It is much the same to-day.

The art of shorthand is, it appears, to be superseded by one of the queerest inventions on record. The revolution is to be effected by means of a machine called a "glossograph," consisting of six levers, forming a sort of cage, each communicating with a tracing pencil. The use to be made of the "glossograph" is rather curious. While the orator or lecturer is holding forth, the reporter is to repeat the words of the speaker with his tongue in the cage. Thus the quickest conversation, some London journals tell us, may be taken down with ease. The ludicrous aspect which this new invention assumes may be an obstacle to its adoption.

The Lancet agrees with those who maintain there is far too much whistling on railways; but says it is not true, as stated in a paper read by Mr. [illegible] before the British Association, that "a low note would be equally efficacious for railway purposes as a high one," because, given the same initial intensity in the production of two sounds—one of low, the other of high pitch—there would be little difference between their penetrating powers at long distances, and none at all at such distances as sounds are required to be heard for the purposes of signaling. If whistles are to be heard, and it is essential they should be, at great distances, they must be high pitched. Meanwhile, public health and happiness demand that there should be as little use of the railway whistle as possible.

An ugly old woman at Ipswich, England, taking advantage of her reputation as a witch, obtained $10 from the parents of a sick girl as the price of removing the spell that they believed the invalid was under. A magistrate fined her $5 and made her return the $10. A Normandy hag has just fared worse at the hands of the law. By pretending to cure cattle of all diseases by supernatural means, she swindled the superstitious peasants easily. In court she tried to convince the jury that she was an honest witch. Several witnesses swore that she burned 570 toads in their presence in order to drive the evil spirit out of a cow, and that they distinctly saw a black cat leap from the cow's mouth. The woman was convicted as a swindler, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

Parishes in England existed in the time of Alfred, but parish churches, with [illegible] clergy to serve them, did not come into existence until long after that date. [illegible] most churches [illegible] have been served by a monk from a neighboring abbey. [illegible] history of the parish of Bromhill, [illegible] says that the first presentation by the [illegible] was in 1299, but long before the Reformation the spires and towers of the village [illegible] were seen all over the land. Yet it was until 1439 that the parish priest was [illegible] legally [illegible] in his office with a secure [illegible] and it was specially enjoined that all [illegible] men should reside on their benefices. [illegible] great tithes, however, remained chiefly in the hands of the monasteries up to the dissolution, and then passed to the grantees of abbey lands or those who bought them. [illegible] this way the Duke of Bedford is such an enormous tithe holder.

The successes of the British troops in Egypt have fired the martial enthusiasm of the London street gamins. On the night of the battle of Tel-el-Kebir the boys collected in Cable street to fight a number of opposition boys, both parties being armed with sticks, pokers, and other such weapons. The leader of the attacking party urged his followers by shouting, "Come on, [illegible] we have no time to lose!" and having cleared Cable street, he gave orders for the squad to advance, "Now for the bank," a direction less formidable than it sounds, [illegible] meant not the bank of England, but an embankment near the boys' homes. By [illegible] time the courage of the troops was thoroughly aroused and they were in no mood to give quarter. They attacked everybody [illegible] came across, and one small boy who [illegible] to enter into the spirit of the thing [illegible] knocked down and severely wounded. [illegible] it was that the ringleaders appeared in [illegible] Thames Police Court next day, but the magistrate contented himself with binding [illegible] boys over to keep the peace for a month.

Saturday Night.

After the weary years of strife,
By sorrow crowned, by care oppressed,
We reach the Saturday of life,
The eve of our long day of rest.

There are no curfew bells to toll the [illegible] of parting day, in this unromantic [illegible] the world, but when the town clock strikes the hour of 6 on a Saturday evening, I [illegible] it must sound like a curfew to the soul of [illegible] working world, to the men who throw down hammer and pick, and all the wearisome implements of toil and turn their faces homeward, free, free, for a long sweet morrow [illegible] rest—not the inertia of repose, but the [illegible] free blessedness of the woods and fields [illegible] even the city streets. Look at the [illegible] the crowds who are surging through [illegible] streets up to midnight of a Saturday night, the happy, world-free faces looking curiously for amusement—families [illegible] that have been separated all the week by necessity of daily labor for daily bread, children clinging to the toil worn [illegible] parents, who are strangers to [illegible] other times, too weary on other nights [illegible] enter into their plays or take them out [illegible] that happy walk which always ends [illegible] week. There is a legend told of [illegible] fathers that they were so absorbed [illegible] ness that they did not see enough of their own families to recognize them [illegible] sight; the patient wives devised the pot of [illegible] for Saturday night's supper, to which [illegible] children remained up, and the fathers made their acquaintance.

Saturday night may bring its cares, but they are hardly discernable from [illegible]. In homes where the clean clothes for [illegible] morrow are laid out, the mother has [illegible] more steps to take, but there is a consolation in her labor of love that repays [illegible] full measure, pressed down and running over. This is the psalm of praise! [illegible] morrow will give a benison on her work, [illegible] she has ministered to the needs of the [illegible] for in the shadow of grimed arches and [illegible] ed glass she can sing:

"Sleep, sleep to-day tormenting cares
Of earth and folly born."

In the old Puritan days the Sabbath be[illegible] on Saturday night with the going down of the sun. The mother put her work [illegible] aside, the good man unharnessed the [illegible] from the plough, the peace of the coming [illegible] settled upon them with the evening [illegible] ows; but I doubt not they discussed [illegible] and crops, and the scant, rare news from [illegible] Old World, and read the one weekly [illegible] worldly deeds that were not admissible [illegible] the Sundays of that period, when a [illegible] manna would not have excited the wonder [illegible] telegraphic wire would have caused. "[illegible] be good o' Sundays" was a law, and it [illegible] not mere eye-service either; it was [illegible] Puritan mother who told her little boy [illegible] wanted to play marbles on Sunday he [illegible] go into the back yard: "But isn't it Sun[illegible] in the back yard too, mamma?" asked [illegible] little fellow.

But this is Saturday; it is the prelude [illegible] that day of which George Herbert wrote:

"The Sundays of man's life
Threaded together on Time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal glorious King."

Something of the day's peace and [illegible] fore-cast in the dropping of heavy burdens, the loosening of bands of toil, the fall[illegible] back a little in the march of life; some [illegible] gone home since last Saturday night; [illegible] have heard for them the turning of

"That slow door,
That opening, letting in, lets out no more."

The Saturday night of life has dawned [illegible] to the sunrise of the land where Sabbaths have no end, where the inhabitants shall [illegible] more say, "I am tired!" Are they [illegible] satisfied who have laid by the small and [illegible] did cares of this life, which occupied [illegible] much of their time, to sit down forever [illegible] Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of the Father?

"If I should die to-night
Ere the rise of another sun,
With so many things unfinished
And so [illegible] begun,
I wonder [illegible] could say; "O
Father thy will be done."

"Oh," sigh the tired men of business, [illegible] is Saturday night; turn the keys on invoices and ledgers;" "Oh!" cry the weary [illegible] "to-morrow is Sunday! I can rest!" [illegible] the children in," says the mother; "[illegible] must all be washed to night." Ah! [illegible] missing; the Shepherd is carrying that [illegible] in His bosom [illegible] safe in the fold above. It was wise in the Puritans to begin the Sunday at the preceding sunset—it ought [illegible] be wicked to enter into any sordid or speculative work while we are crossing that [illegible] arch of peace which like the rainbow [illegible] meets two horizons, the world of toil, and [illegible] world of rest.

The Daisy.

[illegible] little white leaves in the grasses
[illegible] spread wide from the smile of the sun
[illegible] waits till the daylight passes
[illegible] closes them one by one.

[illegible] have asked why it closed at even,
[illegible] I know what it wished to say:
[illegible] here are stars all night in the heaven
[illegible] And I am the star of day."

The Lepers of Tracadie.

Day in the Lazaretto in North-East New Brunswick.

From the New York Sun.

Miramichi is a little known town in northstern New Brunswick, about half way tween New York and Greenland. Over lf a century ago one Gardner, a Scotchn, and a resident of the town, saw a fawnlored spot on his wife's forehead. Anon ere were ominous swellings at the corners her eyes. Then the tendons of her fingers gan to stiffen and contract until her nds resembled a bird's claws. The fawnlored spots were doubled and quadpled. The husband sought the advice of . Mackey, a young medical graduate. his physician made a careful study of the sease. It baffled his skill. He could ve it no name. He found nothing like it on e medical calender. It seemed beyond e reach of remedies. So engrossed was in its study that he grew thin and le. Sleepless nights were passed. To d his distraction, his attention was rected to a second case. The victim was Mrs. Landry, living seventy-five miles om Miramichi. Of French extraction, e was in no way related to Mrs. Gardner. wn-colored spots appeared upon her dy. Her skin became as transparent and scaly as isinglass. The contraction of e figers and the ominous swelling of the es were there. There were the same hes and pains as in the case of Mrs. ardner. The physician was nonplussed. t the end of his medical rope, determined ascertain the true character of the disease, e sold his property and went to Europe. e travelled through England, France and ermany, and gleaned no information. cting upon a hint received in Paris, he assed through Denmark into Norway. ear the coast, where the main staple of od was dried fish and salt meats he visitd a zaretto. Its inmates were immured or li e. There was no mistaking the ymptoms. They were suffering from the me disease as Mrs. Gardner and Mrs. andry. It was leprosy, and incurable.

On his return to Miramichi Dr. Mackey und this scourge eating into the little com- y like a cancer. Prompt action was y. Mrs. Gardner's fingers had r off at the points, and her skin was ry a flaky. Mrs. Landry was in a worse ondition. Her eyesight was gone, and she xhibited unmistakable symptoms of lep ntiasis. The young physician soundd th alarm. The interest of the oldest racti ners was aroused. One or two coffed at the idea of leprosy, and asserted hat the disease would yield to remedies mployed in scrofulous and similar comlaints. Their experiments, however, erified the young doctor's discovery, and he community was thoroughly startled. t was a company mainly of descendants of he old French settlers The English anguage was not much spoken. Families ad married and intermarried for nearly wo centuries, until whole parishes were ovetailed. The result was similar to that ttending the overheated and impure. Its mpurities were quickened by a diet of salt neats and dried fish, and a genuine leprosy ropped to the surface. There were 78 ases in one section within twelve months.

The provincial parliament was spurred to ction under the personal appeals of the embers from Miramichi. A bill establishng a lazaretto was passed. Shelldrake sland, dotting a bay on the northeast coast of the province, was the spot selected. It was an isolated island, off all lines of ravel. Here buildings were erected, with barred windows. A strict search for all tainted with leprosy was made, and they were confined on this island. Scores of the unfortunate wretches were captured. The lazaretto was under the charge of two men, who seemed to be destitute of all feeling. No care was given the lepers. They were mostly ignorant French Canadians, who had eked out a living by cultivating the thin soil and by fishing. Cleanliness was not a virtue. They were neither bathed nor dieted. Clean underclothing was distributed thrice a year. The most abject and squalid never removed their clothing but drew their clean shirts over their old ones at each distribution. The sexes were not separated. The lazaretto was a virtual prison for life. Its inmates rotted like murrained sheep. It was the horror of the adjacent parishes. Occasionally a poor wretch escaped, and appealed to those outside for protection. Every face was turned from him. He desecrated every thing that he touched. Even the fence that he leaned against while telling his pitiful story was contaminated. If he drank from a spring the spring was poisoned. If a cup of milk was given him the cup was broken as soon as drained. A walking upas tree, freighting the atmosphere with poison, would not have been regarded with more horror. He was either recaptured or driven back to the lazaretto by hunger. Worse than all this, lepers, in whom the seeds of the disease were fructifying, were concealed by friends and relatives. The lazaretto was more of a prison than a hospital. A commitment disgraced a family far more than a commitment to the penitentiary. Fathers and mothers endangered themselves and their families in the effort to shield a favorite son or daughter. It was a disgrace to be hidden, and not to be made public. A discovery of leprosy tainted every relation. The children could not make eligible marriages, and the family was shunned.

The lazaretto was removed to Tracadie, on the bay of that name, about 1849. Here the treatment of the unfortunates was a little better, but there was an utter lack of cleanliness until fourteen years ago, when Sisters of Mercy took sole charge. They found the inmates dying in filth and misery They inaugurated new treatment. They tore the iron bars from the windows. The lepers were bathed each day, and their ulcers were carefully dressed. The bandages were washed, and the clothes of the unfortunates were kept scrupulously neat and clean. They were allowed the freedom of the grounds. The sexes were separated. Rations of tobacco were given to the men. A sailboat was bought, and parties of the lepers were allowed to go sailing and fishing. Nor was the body alone entertained. The sisters administered to the mind. The lepers no longer brooded day and night over their unfortunate condition. Some of their number played the violin, and they danced to the music. A sure death was thus robbed of some of its terrors. When the provinces were confederated in the Dominion of Canada, the lazaretto passed under the control of the federal government. The sisters, however, remained in charge, receiving a miserable pittance from the government for their labors. The rigor of the law was softened by Father Joseph A. Babineau, pastor of the little Catholic church at Tracadie. When cases of leprosy were reported he visited the afflicted and prepared their minds for their inevitable fate. They usually entered the lazaretto with resignation, and submitted to their fate without a murmur. When the good father's efforts failed, the strong arm of the law was invoked, and they were seized like criminals and imprisoned for life. Their discontent was softened by the kindness of the sisters, and they dropped into the grave hopeful of a better fate in the world to come.

I visited Tracadie on Sunday, July 16. The Hon. Arthur D. Williams, of New York, accompanied me. The visit required a fifty-five mile drive from Newcastle, a thriving village on the curved railroad from Halifax to Quebec. The road was a bee line and as level as a prairie. It was shaded by stunted spruce trees. We passed straggling settlements of French Canadians and Indians. At times the atmosphere was laden with a putrid odor, which came from the refuse of the lobster canneries on the beach. This is used as a compost, for the soil is thin and poor. Where the spruces are cut away there were magnificent views of the ocean and of bays leading to prolific msaon and trout streams. It was midnight before we reached Tracadie. On the way our driver repeatedly awoke residents on his route, and asked for a pail to water his horses. It was always given with the greatest pleasure. The conversation was in French. There is no hotel at Tracadie. Through the kindness of Mr. John Young, its richest inhabitant, we were given a lunch and lodgings. At sunrise next morning the little bell in the belfry of the primitive Roman Catholic chapel fronting the broad blue bay announced the early mass. High mass was celebrated at 10.30. By 10 o clock the dusty roads were filled with French Canadians on their way to church. A few came in ricketty waggons but the most of them were on foot. They stept up in squads, old and young, clad in quaint costumes. Some had arisen with the dawn and walked ten or twelve miles. One man, on crutches, lived seven miles away. It was a hot day, and the air was filled with mosquitoes and sand flies. The devotees seated themselves on a long broken pile of cord wood near the house of the priest, and awaited the tap of the bell. The little cemetery allotted to the lepers lies in the shade of the unpainted church. It is overgrown with shrubbery and brambles. A large, weatherbeaten cross stands in the centre, stretching its arms over the unmarked graves of the unfortunates. A wharf and a fish house stand 200 yards to the north, and beyond them the squatty buildings and dormer windows of the lazaretto are seen. We knocked at the door of the parsonage. The rustics gazed at us inquiringly. Father Babineau was in the vestry dressing for mass. He was summoned by an attendant and gave us a gracious reception. His glittering black eyes and pale, intellectual face recalled the features of Judge Cardozo. With extreme courtesy he accompanied us to the lazaretto, leaving his assistant, Father Nugent, a jolly-faced Irishman, to chant mass. As we crossed a rustic footbridge near the lazaretto we heard the plaintive notes of a violin. The melody was a sad and sweet blending of the "Canadian Beat Song," and "Annie Laurie." The musician was a leper whiling away the weary hours.

We ascended the porch. Passing into the entry we stood before a door with a wicket. The words, were above the door. Father Babineau rang the bell. A second afterward the white face of a Sister of Mercy appeared at the open wicket. The father spoke to her in French and she opened the door. We were ushered into a reception room under the motto,

TOUT PASSE!

PERSONNE N'ENTRE ICI S'IL NE VIENT AIME JESUS CHRIST.

Sister St. John, matron of the lazaretto, is a pleasant-faced woman, about 36 years old. She came from the Hotel Dieu, in Montreal. Fourteen years among the lepers have familiarized her with their manners, customs and feelings. She has been the recipient of many a sad story. She knows the families of all the inmates and probably has a more thorough knowledge of the nature and character of the disease than the physician who receives $300 a year from the Government for an annual visit. She has charge of the cabinet of drugs, and has a fair knowledge of medical jurisprudence. As there is no doctor within fifty miles of the institution, the Tracadiens and the inhabitants of outlying settlements come to her for medical advice. Prescriptions for the poor are filled without charge. She knows the families tainted with the disease, and traces accurately the relationship between the afflicted. The same strain of blood appears to flow in the veins of all. A majority of the lepers were born in Tracadie. They all come from within a circle of seventy miles. Under Sister St. John's supervision an accurate record of the inmates has been kept. There is no prior record on file. Since 1868 the Sister's record shows that fifty-eight out of ninety have died. There are now twenty-six in the institution. This number is larger than at any time within fourteen years. The average of life, after the appearance of the disease, is from ten to fifteen years. Some die within three or four years, and there is now a woman in the institution who has been suffering over fifty years. She was an inmate of the lazaretto on Shelldrake Island, forty years ago. While there the disease disappeared, and it was supposed she had been cured. She returned to her home in Tracadie, married, and had children. Twenty years afterwards the telltale spots again appeared, and she was remanded to the lazaretto. She is still living, handless, and almost sightless. A daughter, twenty-four years old, whose fingers are drawn up like the claws of a dead bird, has inherited the scourge from the mother, and is now in the institution.

Singular as it may seem, the lepers are subject to attacks from ordinary diseases. There have been deaths from jaundice and typhus fever. In some cases the skin is dry and clean, and in others it is covered with ulcers. Those afflicted with ulcers live the longest. Damp weather has a damaging effect. The patients are very feverish, and complain of rheumatic pains. They have fits of drowsiness, and sleep for hours daily. In winter and summer they invariably improve. None have died within fourteen months.

They are peculiarly sensitive. We were warned against using the word leprosy within their hearing. They speak of it as the "disease." Each patient apparently has an impression that there may be some mistake in his case, and that he is suffering from some other complaint. At times medicine is given to relieve them from pain. Any unusual decoction seems to affect them. Strong tea has removed the fawn-colored spots, but as soon as the system becomes accustomed to the tea, the spots return. Three years ago the hearts of all the lepers throbbed with joy. A nostrum called Fowle's Humor Cure was administered, and the disease entirely disappeared. Fowle was in ecstasies. He forwarded box after box of his mixture, and it was used freely. Within six months, however, the scourge reappeared with more violence than ever.

Cases have occurred where those afflicted with leprosy left the country before they were sent to the asylum. Two or three years ago the spots appeared upon two girls belonging to well-known families. Determined to avoid the lazaretto, the girls went to Shediac and were employed as houshold servants. Hearing of their flight, Father Babineau wrote to Shediac. He had observed indications of leprosy on them before their disappearance. The girls were alarmed, and fled to Providence, R. I. One died in that city in a private family, where she had been engaged as a chambermaid. Father Babineau learned the whereabouts of the survivor, and went to Providence. After a long talk he convinced her that it was her duty to return to Tracadie and enter the lazaretto. She did so, and died within a year.

The good father relates the particulars of a case of leprosy in a man two years married. There were the usual forerunners of the disease. The Father visited the man's residence and talked with his wife about it. The husband insisted that it was not leprosy. His wife coincided with him, but expressed a different opinion to the priest in private. Satisfied, however, that the husband was tainted, the wife left him. He remained in his house alone. Not long afterward, seeing the priest approaching, he took to the woods. Father Babineau overtook him and remonstrated with him. The man was obstirate. He was threatened with the rigor of the law. The conversation lasted two or three hours, and the husband was finally induced to enter the lazaretto.

Not long ago the disease broke out on the body of a fisherman, who for twenty years had lived alone in a hut on the bay of Tracadie. When the priest asked him to enter the lazaretto, his only objection was a fear that he might become lonesome. He is now in the hospital pining for the companionship of nature.

A more distressing case occured two months ago. The death spots appeared on the mother of four little children. The priest repeatedly talked with her, and she was finally induced to part with her husband and enter the living tomb. Her parting with her children was very affecting, and to this day the father's ears hear cries of "Mamma, mamma!" The family is isolated, the children have no playmates, and the neighbors shun the place as though it were the nest of a pestilence.

The disease is said to be contagious, but we could learn of no well authenticated instance of contagion. None of the sisters have shown the least symptoms of leprosy, although two have waited upon the patients for fourteen years. They take the greatest precaution against it. There is only one case on record of a husband and wife who were confined in the institution at the same time. They were cousins. Wives who have had children by leprous husbands, have married on the death of their husbands. Some of the children by the first husband were infected, and those by the second escaped. In a recent case the disease did not appear until the third generation. Then it broke out on the body of a man of herculean strength. The native families of French descent seem to be satisfied it is contagious. They gaze at the lazaretto from the outside and very few pay it a visit.

The victims of the disease are at first visited by their near relatives, but as the seasons roll on the visits are less frequent, and at last cease altogether. Husbands forget their wives, mothers forget their children, and vice versa. Not long ago a poor boy of 19 broke out of the lazaretto at night, and walked twenty-five miles to see his mother. He remained home a few hours and returned with a less aching heart.

The lepers all express a willingness to work, but many of them are unable to do so. The sisters are allowed only a pittance to feed them. They have meat on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and fish on Friday. Seldom, if ever, do they see fresh beef. They abhor mutton and veal. Fresh pork is the meat mostly eaten. Three of the lepers play the violin, and each appears to be ambitious to excel the other. When the weather is dry, those who are able frequently dance from morning until night. Those who first enter the institution complain of a drowsy feeling, and sleep days and nights, hours at a stretch. The lungs become affected. The hair falls from the eyebrows. The voice is husky. In some cases there is a loss of feeling in the hands and arms. A girl rested her wrist on a red-hot stove, and was seriously burned, without the least sensation. Cuts with the knife bleed, but give no pain. At times the skin seems to be filled with steel filings. Then it cracks open to the bone and gradually shrivels away. When the liver and lungs become seriously affected, the patient wastes away with all the symptoms of consumption. He dies by suffocation.

All have separate beds. The men are kept on the main floor and the women on the floor above. Rarely do they see each other. There is a little room on each floor where the sisters officiate as wardens. There is not a man about the establishment who is not a leper. The sisters are allowed a washer-woman and a servant boy. Aside from this they do all the work. In the dormitories the beds are arranged side by side like beds in a hospital. Old-fashioned quilts cover the iron bedsteads. The floors are scrubbed once a day. Everything is scrupulously neat. Each dormitory contains an oratory, where the afflicted say their prayers on retiring and arising. The walls are covered with pictures of saints and religious mottoes in the French language. Here is a specimen:

POUR UN MOMENT DE SACRIFICE

which seems hardly applicable to persons suffering a lifetime of misery. There is no specified dress for either the male or female lepers, and unaccustomed eyes could not distinguish some of them from ordinary persons.

As we entered the male ward ten of the unfortunates were arising from dinner. It was a plain board table, destitute of cloth and napkins, and furnished with tin plates, cups and spoons. On an iron cot within ten feet of the table, sat a pitiful object. His flesh looked like flakes of sulphur moulded into the shape of a man. He had been in bed over a year. Although but 15 years old he looked like a man of 70. Nothing in the wards on Blackwell's island equals this scene; yet the Sisters said that the patient was much better than he had been. As we entered the apartment a heavy black bearded man clad in a blue woollen shirt turned his face from us, picked up a short black clay pipe, and moved into the sunlight through the opened door. Poor fellow, his misfortunes were his own, and he sought no sympathy from the outer world. He was Michael Duaron, the lone fisherman, who had expressed the fear of being lonesome before entering the lazaretto. The windows were open, and a cool breeze from the sea was felt.

There were ten other males in the ward. All but the miserable being on the bed ranged themselves in line with bowed heads and dejected countenance. Two were mere boys, 11 and 12 years old. One was suffering from leprous elephantiasis. His face was fungus outgrowth. Only one of these men spoke English. He was Peter M. Noel, of Tracadie. A man of magnificent physique, beyond slight swellings above the cheek bones he showed no signs of the disease. He had a clear, blue eye, a rugged complexion, and an honest face. He was a man of deep feeling and of more than ordinary intelligence. Confident of sympathy he told his story in a straightforward way. He was 23 years old, a woodchopper and raftsman.

"You seem surprised to see me here," he said, "because you see no marks of the disease. Look at my hands," showing his palms. All the lines of his hands seemed to have been frosted with silver. The pores of the skin glistened as though dusted with silver. "Look at the whites of my eyes," he continued. They were of a light orange color. He pointed to the slight swellings below his temples, and then said: "All your doubts would be removed if you saw my body. This spring I was logging up the northwest branch of the Miramichi. One night, when I going to bed near Cunards Ledges, I saw a yellow spot on my leg. I paid no attention to it, supposing that it came from wading too much in cold water. Two or three days afterward another spot appeared near the first one. I began to have strange pains in my legs, and could not get sufficient sleep. Within a week I noticed a spot on my breast. The pains increased and I thought that I had rheumatism. I took some medicine for it, but it did me no good. At last I came over here, by the advice of a comrade, to see the Sisters and to find out what was the matter with me. They told me that I had the disease and here I am for life."

Noel told his sad story with an erect head. He had not been in the lazaretto long enough to acquire the dejected look of his fellow sufferers, but the shadow on his face indicated that it was surely coming. He is a fair violinist, and undoubtedly vents much of his sadness through his instrument. With tears in his eyes he spoke of the kindness of the Sisters, but he complained of a lack of books and newspapers. He could not read English, and his countenance grew bright when promised a file of Parisian journals. While grateful for the little tobacco given them by the Sisters, he spoke of its poor quality. "They buy it at Ferguson's," he said, "and of course the Sisters can't tell whether it is good or bad; but smoking is about our greatest enjoyment, and I wish we could have good tobacco."

The Sisters then conducted us up stairs to the female ward. Fourteen women and girls in all stages of emaciation, stood in line with clasped hands and eyes cast down. Sisters and cousins were among them. All were in some way related to the men below. They were not disposed to be communicative. One woman, nearly eighty years old, overheard Sister St. John calling our attention to the fact that she was concealing her hands under her apron. She flung up her apron with spiteful energy, and extended two withered stumps, accompanying the action with bitter words. She had no hands. Her heart was touched by our expressions of sympathy. She was the woman released from Shelldrake island forty years ago under the supposition that she had been cured. She called to her side her daughter, a pleasant-faced woman, 24 years old. Her fingers were talons in appearance, and her hands were withering loosing the joints one by one, as her mother's had done. In the dormitory we saw a female dwarf only 28 years old, she looked to be 90. Her eyes were sightless, and her face misshapen and totally unlike the face of a human being. It was the face of a person suffering from the worst form of elephantiasis. Despite our remonstrances, she arose to receive us. Sad at heart we turned away. The afflicted women, in low tones, bade us good-bye as we went down stairs.

The sisters then showed us the kitchen, the range, the electric bells, the neat apothecary shop, and the exquisite chapel with its image of the Virgin and Child. This chapel is latticed on either side. Behind the lattice on the right of the altar, the sisters hear mass. Half a dozen benches fill the main body of the little chapel, and are evidently used by the male lepers. A solitary woman bearing marks of the disease was on her knees behind the left lattice counting her beads and saying her prayers. Everything throughout the building was clean and neat. The floors were scrubbed as white as marble, the great range shone with stove polish, there was no grease spot on the clothes of any of the lepers. The aprons and handkerchiefs of the women were as white as snow, and the windows were as clean as the plate glass of Simpson, Crawford & Simpson's store. The oratories were simple but attractive. Delicate efforts at ornamentation bespoke the excessive care of the Sisters. The ceilings are low, and the rooms are ill ventilated. The Sisters work to great disadvantage. All that they receive is spent upon the immured lepers. They are now building a dormitory for themselves at their own expense. The isolation of the lazaretto is so complete and visitors are so few, that its wants do not reach the public ear. Surely there ought to be one man in the parliament of the Dominion of Canada to champion the interests of the poor men and women whose life imprisonment is a punishment for no crime, although confined for the protection of the community.

Out again in God's free air, we cast our eyes toward Mr. Young's mansion. Poor Noel and four of his companions stood in the yard awaiting us. "Gentlemen," said Noel, approaching us hat in hand. "I beg your pardon, but my companions here can't speak English. This poor man," pointing to the heavy-bearded man who had left the dinner table on our entrance, "is bleeding at the lungs. He thought that one of you might be a doctor, and that you could tell him what to do for it. He has been on the sea, but he can't stand the sea air any longer, because his lungs are so weak." We could give him no encouragement. Our faces forestalled Noel's translation of what was said. The bearded man walked back to the fence and turned his face to the sea. Noel accompanied us to the end of the lane leading to the highway. It was the boundary of the lepers' world. The two leprous boys walked at our side. One said, "Please, sir, give me a penny." He got a half dollar, and the other boy was not forgotten. If a bag of gold had dropped from the skies, they could not have been more surprised. They shot off towards the lazaretto with the speed of the wind. Nor was Noel forgotten. We had already gained his confidence. He accepted a Canadian bank note with even more astonishment and far more thankfulness than the boys had shown. It was a small sum to create so much happiness in such a wretched being. I involuntarily compared him with William H. Vanderbilt, at that moment probably speeding Maud S, at Saratoga, and with Jay Gould lolling on the silken cushions of his princely home on the Hudson. An hour's interest on Vanderbilt's fortune would strew this agonizing life with humble luxuries, and an millionth part of Jay Gould's fortune make it immeasurably happy. If honesty and industry are any gauge of fortune, what had honest, hard-handed Noel done that his fate should be so much different from theirs?

Noel saw that we were about to part with him. All his longings, fears, and wishes gushed to his lips. "My God," said he, "why can't I get well? I have worked hard. I have never dissipated. I bathe every day. I am clean. I don't see why I can't get well. Sometimes I think that it is not the leprosy [it was the first and only time that he used the word] spoken of in the Bible. I've heard of a man who had the same disease and who was cured by a doctor who said it was the black scurvy. If I was doctored for the black scurvy I believe I'd get well. They say that there is a doctor in Chatham who can cure us. I've lain awake at night studying up a plan to get to him, so that I might ask him to cure me. I have no money, but I would work hard to pay him if he would only cure me. Do you know that at times I can't help thinking that we are not cured because some one is making money by keeping us here? I know it isn't as bad as it used to be when they had a fence with sharp spikes at the top surrounding the yard. Some of the men here have told me how they used to treat them then. The Sisters have changed all that. I have no word of complaint against them. God bless them, they do all they can for us. It is not their fault nor is it our own fault that we are here."

We were standing at the end of the lane. Church was out and a cloud of dust indicated the march of the churchgoers homeward. The sun had passed the meridian. A dinner bell rang. Noel started as though awakened from sleep. "I beg your pardon, gentlemen," said he, removing his hat, "for detaining you from dinner. I see so few who understand our situation that I forget myself when I meet them." Tears were in his eyes: "Come again and see me if you ever revisit the country. God help me, but it will be many a long day and many a long night before I forgot your faces." He turned and walked slowly down the lane, the hot sun casting his shadow before him, and I saw him no more.

MARKDALE, Oct. 5th, 1882.

EAST GREY FALL EXHIBITION.

The above exhibition was held at Flesherton on the 28th and 29th September. The weather during the two days on which it was held was lovely and everything seemed to tend towards making it a success. The horse ring was the centre of attraction, and the speeding much enjoyed. The various sections were well filled with entries, and the animals shown were a credit to the exhibitors as well as to the district. The exhibit of stallions was large. Cattle—the number of thoroughbreds was not very large, yet some fine specimens were shown. They were exhibited under the register of the Herd Book of 1882. H. D. Irwin of, Artemesia, and R. Black, of Proton, showed one and two year old Durham bulls respectively, both very promising animals. J. R. Trimble, of Markdale contributed a very fine cow, as also did R. Lever, of Artemesia, Trimble & Baskerville, of Artemesia, showed only Ayrshire entered, a bull calf. There was a herd of Devons on the ground, the property of Robt. Oliver, Artemesia. This is the first time that this breed has been shown at the fair, and they attracted very general attention. Of grades there was a large number, many of them remarkably fine animals.

The exhibits of sheep were exceptionally large, embracing not only the long woolled Cotswolds, Leicesters, and Lincolns, but also meritorious specimens in the fine woolled Oxford and Southdowns. Of the latter varieties Jamieson and Fee, of Collingwood, were the largest exhibitors. W. Buchannan and H. D. Irwin, of Artemesia, also exhibit. In the coarse-woolled kinds Wm. and Ed. Fawcett, of Euphrasia; Jas. McMorris, of Osprey, and Wm. Shepherdson, of Collingwood, were the principal exhibitors.

Swine—the number in this class was very small, but were fine specimens.

Poultry was very fairly represented.

Grain—the exhibit of fall wheat was the largest we have witnessed at a county show and, without doubt, the best quality. Spring wheat very good, but the number of entries were small. Barley and oats were also a good sample, but little of them.

Roots were fairly represented, there being a large number of entries, especially of potatoes, othe roots were medium.

Fruit was well up, though the season has been rather unfavorable.

The finest display of carriages that has ever been at a county fair in Grey was to be seen at this one. There is a great improvement in this line, which fact speaks well for the prosperity of the county; for if there were no demand for such the manufacturers would not risk so much capital and pay so much attention to that line of business.

The domestic manufactures and ladies' work was scarcely up to former years in regard to the number of entries, yet the quality was good. Mr. Bulmer had a fine display of photographs.

The show, on the whole, was a success and taking into consideration the exceedingly large number present, it was the best ever held by the society. The Board of Management may justly feel proud of the success which has attended their earnest efforts. We are indebted to the efficient and courteous Secretary, Mr. S. Damude, for the following prize list which we give below:

WRECK OF THE "ASIA."

BODIES FLOATING IN LARGE NUMBERS.

Owen Sound, Oct. 2.—The tug Ann Long arrived here at midnight last evening, having on board the following bodies lost on the ill-fated steamer Asia:—John McDougall, of Owen Sound, who was purser; E. Sparks, of Ottawa; Jackson supposed to be a farmer from near Listowel; Mrs. Kirk, from Clover Hill; Sheppard and one unknown supposed to be Silas Bonard. Two unknown bodies were picked up by the steamer Africa, and three by the steam barge Enterprise, near Lonely Island, and sent here by the tug. Captain Noble, of the tug Ann Long, reports that a large number of bodies are floating around near where these were picked up, and could be easily recovered if a tug with appliances for the purpose were despatched at once.

THE PURSER'S FUNERAL.

The remains of Mr. J. McDougall, purser of the wrecked steamer Asia, were interred this afternoon at four o'clock.

McFarland's immense establishment is crowded with eager customers after the bargains. His competitors are disgusted and say there is no use competing with Mc.

We would direct the attention of our readers to the advertisement of R. J. Sproule, Flesherton, which appears on our eighth page. He has a large and new stock of everything usually found in a first class store and at low prices. He is also prepared to pay the highest cash price for wheat and farm produce.

Vigilance constant and sleepless vigilance is said to be the price of liberty. In the same way only can success be obtained in commercial life. W. J. McFarland is ever on the look out for bargains for his thousands' of customers. He has recently purchased over $7,000 worth of stock at 47½ cents on the dollar, which will be sold at unheard of prices.

ON THE WATER AS WELL AS ON THE LAND.

How is it possible to prevent a good thing from being known, is the question now agitating some few individuals in the Dominion. Therefore larger numbers although not sufferers from rheumatic troubles, are of the opinion of Capt. Barry of Kingston, owner of several lake vessels, and himself sailing master of one, who says: "I, too have been cured of the rheumatism by St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy; and I know of several others besides myself who have been cured of that dreadful ailment in the same manner; it is known upon the water just as well as on land, and is considered an invaluable remedy everywhere.

Spanking bargains are to be got at McFarland's, Overcoats $4.00; a good suit $4,50; pants $1,25; Hats 50 cts.; all purchased at 47½ cts on the dollar.

THE REASON HE WROTE IT.

"I write this," says Mr. Nelson de Pew, of Napiersville, Quebec, Canada," to say that, after suffering six years with rheumatism—accompanied with the most intense pain with which any one could be afflicted—I have been completely cured by the use of St. Jacobs Oil. I thus write because I consider it my duty so to do, and because I wish to publish to suffering humanity the wonderful efficacy of the Great German Remedy. When I remember that during six years in which I was bedridden with this awful disease, I tried all kinds of remedies, and expended a very large amount of money with doctors of all schools, and underwent all kinds of treatment, the feeling of gratitude at my marvelous recovery impresses me to give the widest publicity to my case,"

Over seven thousand dollars worth of fresh, clean goods are being opened out by W. J. McFarland, purchased at 47½ cts. on the dollar. Bargains may be expected as Mc. is the boss, and don't you forget it.

A fraud, in the shape of a woman, selling subscriptions for a picture called "The Fruits of the West," is on her travels. She collects the money in advance but never delivers the pictures.—Shelburne Free Press.

A contemporary states that punched silver is in many sections of the country no longer current. People should take care and refuse coin when they find it has been punched. In some parts of the United States, and we suppose in Canada as well, the practice is not unfrequent of filling the hole with some base metal, and passing the coin so restored. We observe that Judge Lowell, of the United States County Court, has held the former act to be counterfeiting, and the latter passing counterfeit money. We have no doubt the same view would be taken here under our law.

As a speedy cure for Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Diarhœa Cholic, Cramps, Sick Stomach, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all forms of Summer Complaints, there is no remedy more reliable than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Dealers who sell it and those who buy it are on mutual grounds in confidence of its merits.

The fruitful season of the year is prolific with many forms of Bowel Complaints, such as Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum, &c., as a safe guard and positive cure for those distressing and often sudden and dangerous attacks nothing can surpass that old and reliable medicine Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Croup, it is said, can be cured in one minute, and the remedy is simply alum and sugar. The way to accomplish the deed is to take a knife or grater, and shave off a small particles about a teaspoonful of alum; then mix it with twice its amount of sugar, to make it palatable, and administer it as quick as possible. Almost instantaneous relief will follow.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

W. E. Gifford. Pastor M. E. Church, Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he tells us in a recent letter that he considers it the best family medicine now before the country for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

A New Jersey town has passed an ordinance requiring all tramps found within its limits to be set to work draining the town. That is just the kind of work a well regulated tramp is adapted to. He generally begins, however, by "draining" the citizens.

"HEROES OF THE PLAINS.—In American history there are no more interesting figures than the Heroes of the border. Bold, dashing, adventurous and patriotic; loyal to friends, to country and to the interests of society, their work was singularly effective in the advancement of western civilizatiion. With seeming recklessness, their efforts were in the interest of law and order, and the people owe them a debt of gratitude they do not forget. Their page in history is as fascinating as it is honorable, and their is a peculiar pleasure in reading the narrative of their wonderful exploits. Among those, whose careers were singularly adventurous, are Kit Carson, Wild Bill, Buffalo Bill, Capt. Payne, Texas Jack, California Joe, Capt. Jack and others, whose achievements have made them justly and widely famous. They have a warm place in the hearts of the people, and a prominent one in their admiration. It is appropriate that their achievements should be recorded, and we note with pleasure the forthcoming of a new book from the press of N. D. Thompson & Co., New York and St. Louis, called "THE HEROES OF THE PLAINS," covering the ground of border history. It is profusely illustrated with 100 engravings and 16 colored lithograph plates. It is sold by subscription through canvassing agents, and presents an opportunity to agents to make money especially inviting. We advertise it in another column.

A REMARKABLE CASE

W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, suffered from a disease of the Liver and Kidneys, that brought him so low that his life was despaired of; he lay for 10 and 15 days without an operation of the bowels; after taking one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters he was enabled to leave his bed and drive out, three bottles more completed a cure, and he says that he is now a better man than he has been for years.

It has been remarked that the quotation, "that it is better to give than to receive," applies to medicine kicks and advice, but this rule don't apply to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Those who receive that, get a reliable and infallable remedy for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Dysentery, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all Summer Complaints of Infants and Adults.

Subscribe for the STANDARD and get that splendid horse book free. Commence any time.

Travellers will find the best remedy for Sea Sickness in Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. While for Sick Stomach and diseases brought on by change of water, diet, etc., and for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Dysentery, and Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, nothing acts more in harmony with nature to effect a cure.

The STANDARD is only $1 a year in advance.

The Sort of People That One Meets at Dances.

THE DEBUTANTE,
Who thinks the world all roses,
Who loves at sight the first man who proposes:
Believes that each admirer is sincere,
And cannot bear that men at love should sneer.

THE NEAT YOUNG MAN,
With high well-starched collar,
And expectations! Ready cash, a dollar;
Who dances like a well-made dance-machine.
And wears a most depressed indifferent mien.

THE KNOWING GIRL,
Who's waltzed through several seasons,
Not married yet! But then she has her reasons,
Who's always dressed with chic that makes girls jealous;
To please her partners this one is most zealous.

THE MAN OF YEARS,
No longer pleased with folly,
Who thinks that dancing's good, but supper's jolly;
Prefers to spend his time in conversation,
With perhaps, to sweeten it, the least flirtation.

THE CLEVER GIRL,
Who's great on education,
Whose talk is lofty and of long duration:
Who scorns frivolity, neglects her clothing,
Loves Women's Rights, and looks on men with loathing.

THE NERVOUS MAN,
Who stands up in a corner,
The very image of a new Jack Horner:
The sort of man who asks, (whilst slyly glancing
At his fair partner,) "Are you fond of dancing?"

THE PRETTY GIRL,
Of whom men ask, "Who is she?"
And women murmur that she's far too gushy;
Of whom few guess, who meet her winsome glances,
She has a heart, a thing apart—from dances.

THE TAME YOUNG MAN,
Who talks about the weather,
And hopes your step and his go well together,
Agrees to every single word you utter,
Can't dance a bit, and then begins to stutter.

THE ANXIOUS GIRL,
"Not been out much before."
But very willing to go out much more;
Who, when she's asked to dance, looks very grateful,
Likes grown-up men, and things that boys are hateful.

THE FLIRTING MAN,
Who falls in attitudes,
Talks to each girl of love—in platitudes;
Looks ling'ring looks which seem to breathe devotion,
And doesn't feel, himself, the least emotion.

THE FAST YOUNG MAN,
Who drops in for an hour,
Who generally wears some large white flower;
Who quotes from comic songs, and smells of smoking,
And has a great propensity for joking.

THE CHAPERON,
Who sits with smile so weary,
To her a dance must be a thing right dreary;
Who beams upon young men with lots of money;
For poor young men her looks are not so sunny.

THE GENERAL CROWD,
The average man and maiden,
With never too much brain or beauty laden;
But he will see, who at these lines once glances,
The sort of people that one meets at dances.

Dying Words of the Great.

Dr. Johnson, passing away amid a tumult of uneasiness and fear, said to one who stood close beside his bed: "God bless you, my dear!" The celebrated Dr. Adams, rector of the High School of Edinburgh, in some moments of delirium preceding his d ath, whispered, "It is growing dark, boys;" stretching forth his hand, "you may go!" Queen Elizabeth of England, dying on her royal couch, was heard to moan out the heartrending words as she closed her eyes forever, "All my possessions for one moment of time!" But the noble Wesley simply exclaimed, in calmness of spirit: "The best of all is, God is with us." Poor Robert Burns, out of his head when he drew his last breath, cried: "Oh, don't let the awkward squad fire over me!" How curious, indeed, that Lord Thurlow should have cried out, as he passed away: "I'm shot if I don't believe I'm dying!"

"Ah! mes enfans, you cannot cry as much for me as I have made you laugh in my time!" so said the brilliant wit of France, Scarron, as he lay dying that hour with a host of weeping friends around h .

It was a Christian philosopher like John Locke who exclaimed with his latest breath that solemn day. "Oh, the depth of the riches of the goodness and knowledge of God!" How strange to think that the great Mirabeau, after a life of wild discord, should have cried out frantically, as he lay waiting for the last change, "Music! Let me die to the sound of delicious music!" Washington, with the smile of a saint, looked up into the face of his weeping wife as she bent over him at Mt. Vernon that dismal day, and calmly said, as he crossed his hands above his noble heart, "It is well!" And the last words of Luther's friend, Melancthon, are wonderfully striking, it seems to me. The former asked him that hour if he desired anything. "No, Luther, no! Nothing, nothing but heaven!" he answered, and died with a smile upon his face. The ruling passion may be said to have been still strong with Chesterfield when he passed away, for the last words he uttered were, "Give Daytolles a chair!" Did poor Cowper say anything before he died—he who had always dreaded even the thought of dying? Why, it is said he sank to rest as peacefully as a little child. Ah, but what did Hobbs, the deist say just before he gasped his last breath? "I am taking a fearful leap in the dark;" but the sweet Herbert said, "Now, Lord, receive my soul!" Dear Goldsmith's physician asked him a few moments before he ceased to breathe if his mind was at ease. His mournful answer was, "No, it is not!" And yet was not Goldsmith really as lovely a character, at heart, as any man who ever lived? The deaf Beethoven, whose whole soul had been full of glorious harmony throughout his life, cried out at last, "Now I shall hear!" May we not cherish the hope that Byron's thoughts were of God and heaven when he said at last, so wearily, "I must sleep now!" The sun was shining very brightly in the room where the great Humboldt lay dying, and he said, as he watched the beautiful rays, "How grand the sunlight! It seems to beckon earth to heaven!" John Adams and Thomas Jefferson died on the same day, but one with his last breath "Independence forever!" and the other, "I resign my soul to God—and my daughter to my country." Sir Thomas More said to an attendant, as he ascended the scaffold on the day of his execution, "I pray you see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself." Beautiful Anne Boleyn, just before she knelt down to lay her head on the block, clasped her neck with her hand and said, "It is small, very small, indeed!" What could have possessed Franklin to say to his friends on his deathbed, "A dying man does nothing well!" What a strange question for Cardinal Beaufort (or any other man) to ask at the last moment of his life, "What! is there no bribing death?" Scott said, even when death was creeping very near, "I feel as if I were to be myself again." And Hood, tired out, whispered only the words, "Dying, dying!"

The Old Man's Words of Wisdom.

"If I had a chance to lib my life over again," said the President, as a solemn hush fell upon the meeting. The Laying Out of Grounds.

Friends occasionally write us, saying that their grounds comprise so many acres, and ask us to furnish a plan by which they may lay them out to the best advantage. Sometimes these requests are accompanied by a sketch of the grounds in their present condition. While desirous of aiding our readers in every practicable manner, we are obliged to decline all such requests, if for no other reason than that it is impossible for us to give the needed time to even make gen ral suggestions in individual cases. Even when a complete map is s nt us, it would require hours, if not days of careful consideration, to determine what seems to be the best plan; that it is impossible to give to any one subscriber. Besides, were we to publish a plan suited to one particular place, it would be of little or no use upon any other. It is from the utter impossibility of meeting such requests, that we decline them. There are several works upon the laying out of grounds, which discuss the general points to be observed. The best our friends can do is, to study such works, and apply their teachings to their own places. We give here one general rule to be observed: Make no road or path that is not needed, that does not lead to some point. Fix the points to be reached by roads or paths, and let these sweep by easy curves from place to place: There are many cases in which a straight road is preferable to a curved one, if so, make it. Use common sense in laying out grounds, as in all other matters, and do no unmeaning work. Always make a map of the grounds as they now are, and a plan of the propoeed alterations, and work from measurement.

The New Reporter's Report.

The new reporter was sent to the school examination. His report read pretty well; but there were a few things in it which did not meet the approval of the local editor—such, for instance, as these: "The essays of the graduating class were good, whoever wrote them;" "the floral offerings were excessive, and from the number received by Miss Simplegush we judge her fa her owns a first-class greenhouse;" "the young lady who read the valedictory to the teacher has in her the making of a fine actress. She simulated sorrow so accurately that the writer might have been misled had he not subsequently heard the young lady speak of this same 'dear teacher' as 'hateful old thing.'"—Boston Transcript.

Goat Milk in London.

One of the most picturesque sights in the squalid back streets which lie betwe n Leicester Square and Lincoln's Inn Fields is something exceedingly primitive and even romantic in the spectacle. The French peasant who owns the small flock of goats which supply many families with their morning's milk saunters slowly behind his docile herd. They know the sound as well as their owner and pick their way across the network of streets with the utmost familiarity; nor do they neglect to pick up any vegetable garbage that may be lying across their path. When he nears the house of a customer the goatherd plays on a pipe, supposed to resemble that of the mythological Pan, a pleasant and even poetic substitute for the melancholy howl of the native milkman. When the order is given the goats halt before the door, a penny-worth of milk is drawn off into a tiny measure, nearly a score of which barely fill a quart. While one goat is being milked the others stand by nibbling stray cabbage-leaves or eagerly eating the crusts of bread which children bring to them from their mother's table. The milking over, the herd moves on to make another halt where another pennyworth is required, when the process is repeated. The procession is again resumed, and kept up until the end of the walk is reached or the goats are dry. It is a curiously Arcadian custom to exist in the heart of London, and it may be doubted whether one Londoner in a hundred has ever heard of the existence of a wandering goatherd and his obedient flock.

The Utility of Drunkenness.

Darwin shows that the onward progress, the development, or what may be described as the collective prosperity of the species, is brought about by over-multiplication, followed by a necessary struggle for existence, in the course of which the inferior or unsuitable individuals are weeded out, and "the survival of the fittest" necessarily follows; these superior or more suitable specimens transmit more or less of their advantages to their offspring, which, still multiplying excessively, are again and again similarly sifted and improved or developed in a boundless course of forward evolution.

In the earlier stages of human existence, the fittest for survival were those whose brutal or physical energies best enabled them to struggle with the physical difficulties of their surroundings, to subjugate the crudities of the primeval plains and forests to human requirements. The perpetual struggles of the different tribes gave the dominion of the earth to those best able to rule it; the strongest and most violent human animal was then the fittest, and he survived accordingly.

Then came another era of human effort gradually culminating in the present period. In this, mere muscular strength, brute physical power, and mere animal energy have become less and less demanded, as we have, by the aid of physical science, imprisoned the physical forces of nature in our steam-boilers, batteries, etc., and have made them our slaves in lieu of human prisoners of war. The coarse, muscular, raving, yellow, fighting human animal that formerly led the war-dance, the hunt, and the battle, is no longer the fittest for survival, but is, on the contrary, daily becoming more and more out of his place. His prize-fights, his dog-fights, his cockpits, and bull-baiting are practically abolished, his fox-hunting, bird-shooting are only carried on at great expense by a wealthy residuum, and by damaging interference with civilized agriculture. The unfitness of the remaining representatives of the primeval savage is manifest, and their survival is purely prejudicial to the present interests and future progress of the race.

Such being the case, we now require some means of eliminating these coarser, more brutal, or purely animal specimens of humanity, in order that there may be more room for the survival and multiplication of the more intellectual, more refined, and altogether distinctively human specimens. It is desirable that this should be effected by some natural or spontaneoue proceeding of self-extinction, performed by the animal specimens themselves. If this self-immolation can be a pr cess that is enjoyable in thiir own estimation, all the objections to it that might otherwise be suggested by our feelings of humanity are removed.

Now, these conditions are exactly fulfilled by the alcoholic drinks of the present day when used for the purpose of obtaining intoxication.—W. MATTIEU WILLIAMS, in the Popular Science Monthly.

Excavations at Pompeii.

Our Naples correspondent writes: "The last house excavated at Pompeii in Isola V., Regione VIII., is of an anomalous kind. It is situated at the south side of the isola. Its construction is quite, unusual as it possesses no proper atirum. On entering the doorway you find on your right a small stove in the corner of the passage, and on the left is the kitchen proper from a room for slaves. Then to the right is a row of columns, forming a triangular space, in the midst of which is the triclinium with the reclining bed formed of masonry, and in the centre a cylindrical table covered with slabs of marble geometrically arranged. The wall paintings of this open space are not of great value; there are heads of Medusa, hippogriffs, and fantastic birds. Returning into the passage there is on the left next to the kitchen an exedra, with walls ornamented with white and yellow squares, divided by columns, decorations, and festoons all in fresco. At the entrance of this room are two strange figures; on the left an infant surprised at the sight of a large rat issuing from a trap, and on the right the same infant trying to catch the rat. On the left wall is a medallion with a small figure, two cupids and two flying geniuses, one with a pastoral staff in the left hand and a bunch of grapes in the right, the other with a staff in the right hand and the other supporting a basket on the shoulder. The opposite wall is in a bad condition, so that nothing can be distinguished but the faint traces of a similar medallion. This room was covered, and above it and the kitchen was a second story, to which access was had by a staircase at the end of the ground floor passage and by a similar passage above. Behind the exedra (always to the left of the passage) comes an inclosed garden. A window into this garden gave light to the staircase. At the extreme end to the right is another small room, with a window opening into the triclinium. This room had another above it, and the sole connection between the upper room with the others on the left was by means of the passage on the second floor. Many vases, shells in bronze, several gold rings with engraved stones. and amphoræ were found in the house, and six skeletons. A walled-up door on the left wall of the exedra makes it probable that the house was once a portion of some other large dwelling, and that it, like so many others, has been sold separately and undergone various changes.—London Daily News.

Karman (Persia) is famous for its carpets. I went to see a factory reput d to be the largest in the city, though employing less than 30 hands. The wretched weavers sat in two low rooms, filed with a sour and sickening atmosphere. Most of them were pale-faced, weakly children of 10 or 12 years, who hardly looked up when I entered, but remained bent over their work, picking up the threads with their nails, which are kept long and notched for the purpose. The patterns are written out in pamphlets and painfully committed to memory, and the children are taught very young—the younger the better. Their memories are quicker than those of grown-up folk. So far as I could understand the patterns, they seemed to be written in much the same style as those directions for knitting or crochet which one sometimes finds upon a lady's table—knit two, purl one, thread over, and knit two together. There was also a youth employed in reading one of the patterns aloud. A carpet about 16 feet by 10 ... be purchased in Karman for 40 to 50 to... —say $80 to $100. Some carpets will ... a year to make, and a decently good ... pet will not be finished in less than ... months; thus, although there are ... hundred factories in and about Karman, ... outturn of carpets is in no way alarmi... The Persians themselves prefer Manches... rugs, hideous things bearing the portr... ure of a camel or a lion, Bay of Napl... Leaning Tower of Pisa and the like.

DAVID AND GOLIATH.

How the Little Fellow Slew the Giant Champion of the Philistines.

Some one bolted into the hut of Saul and announced that a champion had come forth, and Saul said: "Bring him in." He expected some man fourteen feet high, and lifted up his eyes at an angle of 45 degrees. "Where is he?" (surprise). "He is in." "Why, my son, what are you talking about? Go home to your mamma. You must be joking." "Will you just listen to me?" asked little David. "Yes, you're a nice boy; go on." Then said David: "Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there was a lion and a bear came and took a lamb out of the flock. Thy servant that slew the lion and the bear will beat the brains out of this uncircumcised Philistine." Saul began to see the point. "My son, it's a fact. Why didn't I think of it before? Go out and win. But come, let's have a little common sense in this matter. Bring in my armor." And they loaded the little fellow down with 200 or 300 pounds of brass. "I can't wear this. I ain't used to this sort of thing," said David and he put it off.

Brother, don't you try any of that devil's armor. Don't let the devil put an ounce of brass on you. Trust in the Lord sine cera, honey, without a particle of wax, our word sincere. Victory comes not by trusting in the Lord and common sense, not by trusting in the Lord and keeping your powder dry. Trust in the Lord sine cera, just as you are.

So David goes out without knowing how he was going to fight. He doubtless expected to use his shepherd's staff, as with the lion and the bear, but the Lord showed him a better way. He was comparisoned as a shepherd of the sheep, and that's all the Lord wants to kill Goliath. David gave the giant all the advantage of position. The battle was fought on the ascending slope of the Philistines' hill, Goliath was so full of wrath at the sight of his pigmy antagonist that he lifted his visor to curse him more freely, and that proved his ruin. Our little David slipped a stone in his sling and made a run at him. He didn't stop for a pot shot, but as he ran he just let fly and let God take the stone to its mark. God gave direction to it; it sank into the Philistine's forehead, and down he went. God always directs a smooth stone from the brook when we lean our whole weight upon Him. Goliath dead, all the rest of the Philistines fled. And that is the way to kill Goliath now.—From Sermon by Evangelist Barnes.

A Saint at the Zoo.

Capt. Harry Piper, Alderman and Superintendent of the Zoological Garden, lately communicated the following facts to a reporter of one of Toronto's most influential papers: "Some time ago we purchased from the collection of animals at Central Park, New York, a monstrous Russian bear, which we have named 'Peter the Great,' on account of his tremendous size. Not long after 'Peter' arrived we found that he was suffering from the rheumatism, and in a pretty bad state. Pete was not the only one in the 'Zoo' which had a touch of that delicious torture; the lion likewise had it, and in fact I was just being cured of a bad case of the rheumatism, myself, by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, the Great Germany Remedy. I found St Jacobs' Oil an excellent remedy, for it cured me in a short while, and my case was a very aggravated one. I argued that if it cured men it must be good for animals as well."

Is the calm you have gained a proof of acquired force or of growing weakness?

Biliousness, Indigestion, Constipation—all forms of Dyspepsia, yield at once to a few doses of Zopesa, the new compound from Brazil. A 10 cent sample proves it.

Substitute for Fresh Air and Exercise.

Persons of sedentary habits or who are employed in factories, ... require something to assist nature, as confinement and want of exercise is sure, sooner or later, to impair the digestive powers. Then it is that nature requires a stimulant such as Briggs' Botanic or Stomach Bitters. It creates an appetite, strengthens the digestive organs, overcomes biliousness, and tones the whole system. It is brought within the reach of all, as it sells at 25 cents a package, and makes one-half a gallon of a splendid mixture, equal to what is sold in bottles at $1 for three-fourths of a pint. Directions accompanying each package. Simple as steeping tea or coffee.

The Years Roll On.

... months, days and moments slowly but surely sink into the abyss of eternity. 'Tis only human misery that notes the slow decay of time. Anything that positively relieves human sufferings is worthy of attention. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor does this. It positively extracts corns, bunions, callouses, and lumps, promptly, painlessly and with certainty. Beware of dangerous substitutes. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprietors. Sold everywhere.

A Fair Exchange.

Will you exchange a chronic state of Dyspepsia, or agree to break up a Bilious Temperament—to give your torpid Liver activity and thus strengthen your Digestion, regain energy, comfort, health and spirits, all for 75c? A single bottle of ZOPESA will do this. A few doses surprise those who try Zopesa. For Biliousness and Dyspepsia in their many forms Zopesa is a Panacea, and is warranted to cure them. It acts speedily and pleasantly. Try a 10 cent sample.

A Word of Caution.

Beware of Opiates and powerful astringent drugs in the treatment of Bowel Complaints, they may lull the pain and check Diarrhœa. etc., but are liable to produce inflammation, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is guaranteed safe and reliable, even for Infants, and is a specifice for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic, Acute or Chronic Diarhœa and Summer Complaints generally.

The huge, drastic, griping, sickening pills are fast being superseded by Dr. Pierce's "Purgative Pellets." Sold by druggists.

Buckingham's Dye for the whiskers is an elegant, safe and reliable article, cheap, and convenient for use; will not rub off. Try it.

"Men must work and women weep,
So runs the world away!"

But they need not weep so much if they use Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," which cures all the painful maladies peculiar to women. Sold by druggists.

PUZZLE.—How is it that Brigg's Electric Oil should reach and successfully treat so many complaints? All nervous diseases yield to its influence in a few minutes when applied externally, and as an internal remedy all are both astonished and pleased.

"VEGETINE," says a Boston physician, "has no equal as a blood purifier. Hearing of its many wonderful cures, after all other remedies had failed, I visited the laboratory and convinced myself of its genuine merit It is prepared from barks, roots and herbs, each of which is highly effective, and they are compounded in such a manner as to produce astonishing results"

Robert A. Wilson, Dispensing Chemist, Brockville, says, under date of June 5th, '82, "I have not the slighest hesitation in saying that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has given my customers more satisfaction than any medicine in my store for the cure of Summer Complaints, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Pain in the Stomach Sea Sickness, Piles, etc. You can use my name, etc."

TONY PASTOR IN TROUBLE.

Tony Pastor, of New York, who is now with his inimitable variety combination making a tour of the Union, is recognized as the leading character vocalist and variety performer of the United States. The writer of this article met Mr. Pastor recently, and found him as genial in private as he is amusing before the public. During our conversation I inquired as to his physical health, and he replied that it was excellent. He had occasionally severe pains, either the result of rheumatic attacks or colds, but any complaints of that character never trouble him long, as he had found out a remedy for all such annoying affections. I asked what the remedy was and he replied, "ST. JACOBS OIL." Mr. Pastor said that he considered the Great German Remedy an excellent preparation for the cure or relief of rheumatism, and that it was the only thing used among professional people for that distressing complaint. He took bottles of it with him whenever he went traveling, and would not be without it, and knew that it was very popular with a number of members of his own company. The foregoing, from the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle, recalls to our mind an item wherein the editor of the Cairo (Ill.) Evening Sun, in paying a tribute to the enterprise of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and expressing his sorrow at the loss by fire which the latter paper sustained, says: "The whole office was knocked into ten thousand pieces—all except the ST. JACOBS OIL Advertisement, which was miraculously preserved." The closing remarks in the above and the following incident are a true index of the unexampled popularity the Great German Remedy enjoys everywhere: At a St. Louis theatre recently whilst the play was in progress, one of the lady performers met with a painful mishap, which quite disabled her. The hero of the piece, equal to the emergency, called out to one of the ushers to "bring a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL quickly." The thundering applause throughout the entire house which promptly followed this happy suggestion was an unmistakable proof of the fact that the audience "had been there themselves," as the expression goes, and experienced the benefits of this wonderful article.

Mr. Charles A. Whitney, advertising agent of Park Garden, Providence, R. I., writes: "For three years I had inflammatory rheumatism in my right hip and knee. I employed many noted physicians, and tried numerous remedies for the ailment, but found nothing to help me until I used the Great German Remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL, which cured me at once. I am now entirely well."

Vegetine

J. BENTLY, M.D., says.

It has done more good than all medical treatment.

NEWMARKET, ONT., Feb. 9, 1880.

MR. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Mass:

Sir—I have sold during the past year a considerable quantity of your Vegetine, and I believe, in all cases it has given satisfaction. In one case, a delicate young lady of about 17 years was much benefited by its use. Her parents informed me that it had done her more good than all the medical treatment to which she had previously been subjected.

Yours respectfully,
J. BENTLEY, M.D.

Superior to any Family Medicine.

DOCTORS GAVE HER UP.

VEGETINE CURED HER.

MONTREAL, P. Q., Oct. 22, 1879.

MR. H. R. STEVENS—Dear Sir,—About fifteen years ago I was troubled with Scrofulous Humor which settled on my lungs and brought on a severe cough. I consulted five or six of the best physicians in Boston, but they gave up treating me, said there was no hope of a cure, and could do nothing more for me. A friend who had used Vegetine in his family recommended me to try it. I procured three bottles, and before finishing the third bottle found myself entirely cured and had not another attack of scrofula for nine years.—After that period I had to get some more Vegetine, but it quickly restored me to health again, and I have not had a third attack. I am sixty-nine years old, and since becoming aware of the virtues of your medicine, have given it to my children and grandchildren, and have recommended it to my friends. The results have been invariably all that could be desired. Previous to my first trial of the Vegetine, I had a cancer removed, and scrofulous sores broke out on me, but none have appeared since, and I believe it superior to any of the Family Medicines in use.

MARIA J. KIMBALL.

I can vouch for the above statement in every particular, and consider Vegetine the best Family Medicine now in use.

MOSES KIMBALL,
Husband of Martha J. Kimball.

WHAT IS CATARRH?

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxœmea, from retention of the effeted matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back part of the mouth causing ulceration of the throat; up the eustachian tubes, causing deafness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness, usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

To effect a cure the parasite must be removed or destroyed, hence inhalants and snuffs are worthless.

Some time since a well known physician of 40 years standing, after much experimenting, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease whether standing for one year or forty years. Sufferers should, without delay, communicate with the business manager, Mr. A. H. Dixon, 307 King St. West, Toronto, and get treatise free by enclosing stamp. Ask your druggist for it

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR,

For Restoring Gray Hair

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment, and herditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed permaturely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth; and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression, falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens; and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER,

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

WINGHAM, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone it properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure

ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins' cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

ARTEMESIA TOWNSHIP Show was held in Priceville on Tuesday, the weather was delightful, but the fair was not as successful as could be desired. No proper place was convenient for the whole exhibit. As a consequence the horses were exhibited in one place, the cattle and sheep in another, the implements in a third, and the grain, roots, ladies' work, &c., in still another. However, things passed off fairly under the circumstances and a fair exhibit was made in many classes; we will give the prize list next week.

Don't forget the cattle fair next Saturday at Markdale. Bring your stock in early.

The American Agriculturist for October is an unusually attractive and valuable number of this old, reliable and famous journal. We notice important changes in the new and handsome cover, fine paper, and superior finish on the many engravings. It is a double number, containing a large Premium List filled with many desirable articles for those who make up clubs.

Among the leading contributors : P. H. Jacobs, on Poultry Keeping, fully illustrated; J. N. Muncey, on feeding hogs ; Dr. Geo. Sudden Death.—Yesterday forenoon, when a very large number of people were on the street, while Mr. Edward Ard of Normanby was driving his team past the Middaugh House on Lambton st., he was noticed to suddenly fall over in the waggon. He was taken out of the waggon and seated in a chair in the Middaugh House and a doctor summoned to his aid, but in a few moments after Jamieson's arrival Mr. Ard breathed his last. After life was fled the body of the deceased was carried into the Town Hall, although the place had been rented by the members of Trinity Church for the day and a Bazaar was being held at the time. The family of the deceased were in town to attend the show. Mr. Ard was always a strong, active member of the Agricultural Society, an old settler and highly respected.—Review.

SOUTH GREY EXHIBITION.

[illegible] was held in Durham [illegible] Wednesday of last week [illegible] the weather being everything that could be desired the exhibition was well attended, the gate receipts being considerably in excess of last year and the number of entries about the same. In some respects it was not equal to last year, and in other respects it was [illegible] on the whole [illegible] may be considered a fair success. The exhibition of grain was very fine and considering the season the show of roots was also good. There was also a splendid display of ladies' work, both useful and ornamental. In the outside department there was a very good show, particularly in cattle. The increased accommodation in the show building was highly appreciated, and the management deserves credit for their efforts on behalf of the society. The band prize was competed for by the Mount Forest band and the battalion band of Walkerton, the former being justly awarded the first prize.—Chronicle.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Dear Sir,—I have been more amused than edified at the position the Advance has taken in reference to the doings of our Council, and especially the Clerk. The great objection taken to Mr. Milne appears to be his politics. Now, sir, I fail to see the force of his argument. The editor of the Advance tries to make it appear that because he is a Conservative he did not receive the printing contract. We venture to say that Mr. Rutherford who got the contract is as staunch a Conservative as Mr. Fawcett. This fact in itself kills his argument on that score.

A Ratepayer.

FIRE.—Shortly after eight on Sunday evening last, a vacant house owned by Mr. D. Malone, on the corner of Bay and Russel streets, was discovered to be on fire. The fire alarm soon emptied the churches and cut short the sermons. The fire brigade soon put out the blaze, but not till the house, which was not of much value, had been damaged beyond repair. There is no doubt the place was set on fire.—Times.

Patience With Love.

They are such tiny feet;
They have gone such a little way to meet
The years which are required to break
Their steps to evenness, and make Them go
More sure and slow.

They are such little hands;
Be kind. Things are so new, and life but stands
A step beyond the doorway. All around
New day has found
Such tempting things to shine upon, and so
The hands are tempted hard, you know.

They are such new, young lives;
Surely their newness shrives
Them well of many sins. They see so much
That, being immortal, they would touch
That if they reach
We must not chide, but teach.

They are such fond, c'ear eyes
That open wide to surprise
At every turn; they are so often held
To suns or showers—showers soon dispelled,
By looking in your face.
Love asks for such, much grace.

They are such fair, frail gifts;
Uncertain as the rifts
Of light that lie along the sky—
That may not be here by and by—
Give them not love, but more above
And harder—patience with the love.

OLD POPPLEWELL'S WILL

A Story With a Moral.

It was a great shock to the fee ings of Mr. Silas Popplewell to discover that his father had bequeathed a l·gacy of £2,000 to his housekeeper, a certain Mrs. Draycott. The woman had entered the old man's service only about a year before his death, and if there had been anything remarkable in her demeanor towards him it consisted rather of scant courtesy and want of attention. She had never apparently made the slightest attempt to ingratiate herself with her master, who, on his part, had always seemed to regard his attendant with calm indifference. But Silas felt doubtly aggrieved because his father had scrupulously concealed from him that he had made a will, leaving him to believe that he was bound to inherit everything as next of kin and heir-at-law.

Silas Popplewell came across the will quite unexpectedly while going through the o.d man's papers a few hours after his decease. The document appeared to be perfectly legal, and had evidently been prepared by a solicitor, whose name was appended as one of the witnesses to the testator's signature. Except the legacy to the housekeeper it left everything to Silas Popplewell and appointed him sole executor. Considering that old Joseph Popplewell was reputed to be a wealthy man most persons in Silas' position would not have suffered the unexpected legacy to disturb their equanimity. But Silas Popplewell was one of those mean, grasping, avaracious individuals who can not bear the thought of losing anything. He considered he was both legally and morally entitled to the whole of his father's property, and regarded the legacy to Mrs. Draycott as a fraud upon his just rights. He was, therefore, overwhelmed with rage and disappointment, and worked himself into a perfect fever of virtuous indignation.

In the midst of his tribulation it suddenly occurred to him that but for the sheet of paper which he held in his hand he would be a richer man by two thousand pounds sterling. This eminently practical view of the situation aroused his worst passions and he soon found himself wondering what would probably happen if the will were not forthcoming. Supposing, for instance, he were to leave the document where he found it and say nothing to anybody? The chances were, he thought, that the housekeeper would believe the testator had revoked it, assuming she had ever been aware of its existence, while it was quite possible, considering his late father's habitual reticence concerning his affairs, that the woman suspected nothing. If the worst happened, and a hue and cry were raised, the will could be conveniently found; or better still, who could gainsay him if he were to declare boldly that his father had deliberately destroyed the will in his presence!

Such insidious reflections as these are apt to blunt a man's moral perceptions, especially when he is laboring under a keen sense of injustice. Silas Popplewell's standard of morality was not a high one, and he would any day sooner have done a shabby trick than lose a sixpence. The consequence was that after a little hesitation he yielded to an uncontrollable impulse and consigned the obnoxious will to the flames.

When the paper was reduced to ashes, Silas suddenly awoke to the fact that he had committed a felony and rendered himself liable to penal servitude. He turned deadly pale when he thought of the disagreeable contingency and for a moment was inclined to repent for what he had done. But when he reflected that his wicked act had not been witnessed by any mortal eyes, while the only evidence of his guilt—the charred paper—was rapidly disappearing up the chimney, he soon recovered his spirits. Having waited patiently until there was no longer any trace left even of the ashes of the will, he locked up the strong box in which he had found it and left the room, feeling tolerably easy in his mind.

Nothing occurred during the next few days to arouse Silas Popplewell's apprehensions, and as he was not troubled with a conscience he began to congratulate himself upon the decisive step he had taken. The housekeeper went about her duties as usual, and did not seem to trouble her head as to whether her master had left a will or not, from which Silas gathered with heartfelt satisfaction that she knew nothing about her legacy. He could not, retrain, however, from watching her furtively, knowing what he did of his father's intention toward her. She was a vulgar, illiterate, elderly woman, singularly devoid of personal attraction and apparently not possessed of much intelligence. While striving in vain to account for his father's extraordinary predilection for her as manifested by his will, Silas was struck by an expression of determination on the woman's face which seemed to indicate a desperate character. He began to suspect that she had forged the will by the aid of accomplices, and was waiting with calmness the issue of her machinations. If so, she was doomed to disappointment, thought Silas, and he chuckled at the notion of having frustrated such an infamous scheme.

When the day of the funeral arrived Silas felt strangely nervous and uncomfortable. He was very much upset by the unexpected number of mourners, the mere fact of having to provide gloves and crape on such an extended scale being sufficient to cause him serious vexation. Old Joseph Popplewell was a man of very humble origin, having, in fact, commenced life as a common laborer, and Silas scarcely knew anything of his father's relatives. Several of these turned up, however, without being invited, and Silas resented their presence very much, not only because he was not anxious to claim kinship with them, but because they would no doubt make particular inquiries about the destination of the old man's property.

It is to be feared that Silas suffered his mind to wander a good deal from his old father's obsequies. He may have had a soft corner in his heart for the old man's memory, but nervousness and apprehension rendered it inaccessable on this occasion. The solemn words of the burial service fell unheeded on his ear, for his mind was disturbed by the prospect of having to explain to his friends that his father had died intestate. His newly-discovered kinsmen were a painfully vulgar and coarse-minded set, and several fragments of conversation referring to the father's supposed testamentary intentions had reached him. The idea that the old man had left a will seemed as general as the extravagant notion that each individual mourner had been named in it. Though he was guiltless as far as they were all concerned, Silas Popplewell, being agitated and unnerved, shrank from the task of answering their inquiries, while he was seized with sudden terror lest the housekeeper should take the opportunity to give utterance to unpleasant suspicions.

When the mourners returned to the house Mrs. Draycott was standing by the fireplace in the sitting-room conversing with a prim, professional-looking gentleman, who, on perceiving Silas, advanced to meet him, rubbing his hands.

"Mr. Popplewell, I believe," he said with a slight bow.

"Yes," replied Silas uneasily.

"You will doubtless know my name when I mention it," replied the other; "I am Mr. Reeves, of Grays' Inn Square."

Silas turned very white and his knees trembled, for Mr. Reeves was the solicitor who had witnessed the execution of his father's will.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said falteringly; "I think there must be some mistake, I have not the pleasure of your acquaintance."

"I imagined your housekeeper wrote to me by your instructions," said the solicitor, slightly embarrassed and glancing at Mrs. Draycott.

"I wrote because the late Mr. Popplewell told me to in case you did not," said the woman, looking toward Silas defiantly. "He wished the will to be read at the funeral."

"Will! what will?" exclaimed Silas, with feigned surprise; and then he added, as though bracing his nerves for the ordeal, "Pray be seated, gentlemen, and take a glass of wine and biscuit."

Each person selected a chair and subsided into it with a good deal of shuffling of feet and coughing, but no one accepted the proffered hospitality. The dead silence which ensued indicated breathless interest and excitement.

"My father has left no will," asseverated Silas, taking up his position on the hearthrug and endeavoring to speak calmly.

"I think you are mistaken, Mr. Popplewell," said Mr. Reeves, politely, but firmly. "Your father executed a will in my presence which I prepared for him about a year ago. He certainly has left a will—unless, of course, he has destroyed or otherwise revoked it."

"The will is locked up in the iron box in the study," interposed Mrs. Draycott with decision.

"I repeat that my father has left no will," cried Silas angrily. "And one is at liberty to search the iron box if he likes. As Mr. Reeves suggests, my father destroyed the will."

"I don't believe it," exclaimed the housekeeper, excitedly. "Why, I saw it with my two eyes not a month ago."

"When did he destroy it? Who see'd 'im do it?" inquired a voice from among the mourners.

"He destroyed it in my presence last—let me see—last Thursday week. I fetched it at his request from the iron box, and he put it in the fire at his own free will," said Silas, lying glibly.

Though affecting to recall the date promiscuously, Silas had been careful to prepare this story beforehand. On the day named he had sat with his father alone for more than an hour during the afternoon, while Mrs. Draycott had been sent out on an errand. If the deceased had intended to destroy the will he would probably have got the woman out of the way on a similar pretence, and the suggestion was plausible enough. The housekeeper gave a palpable start, and was evidently impressed by the coincidence, but among the rest of the audience there was a general expression of incredulity, with a good deal of headshaking and some murmurs.

"Well, gentlemen, I must say that Mr. Popplewell's account is perfectly straightforward," interposed the lawyer, who, whatever his private opinions might have been, probably thought it prudent as a matter of business to side with Silas. "Testators frequently revoke their wills in the manner described. If it is any consolation to you, gentlemen, I may mention that as far as you are concerned the existence of the will would have made no difference to you."

"Will you tell us, Mr. Lawyer, who will get the money, supposing what Mr. Silas says is true?"

"Mr. Popplewell will inherit everything as next of kin and heir at law," replied the lawyer.

This information elicited a loud chorus of indignation, and many insulting epithets were levelled at the head of the luckless Silas, who, pale and trembling, realized that his triumph was dearly bought, even at the price of £2,000. Suddenly the strident tones of Mrs. Draycott became audible above the uproar and compelled attention.

"The old villain has broke faith with me and a sneaking scoundrel he always was and so he died," cried she, speaking under strong excitement. "But I'm no longer bound to keep my secret, and I won't. I say, Bill Allen!" she exclaimed, appealing to one of the mourners, "you ought to know me, though its thirty years and more since I was supposed to have died. You recollect Poll Saunders that old Joe Popplewell married when he was working at the railway down Liverpool way?"

"Why, surely!" ejaculated the individual referred to. "Aye, it's Poll, sure enough!" he added, shading his eyes with his hand.

"I was his lawful wife, Mr. Reeves, and he knew it," she explained, turning to the astonished solicitor. "He deserted me years ago and married a lady—Mr. Silas' mother. I found him out again by accident quite recently, and promised to keep his secret on condition that he would provide for me by his will. But he has been false to me as he was years ago, and now I won't keep silence any lon_er."

"This is most serious," said the solicitor, turning to Silas, who stood aghast with horror and amazement, "if this—this lady can prove her marriage."

"Oh! I have proofs. I took care of that," interposed the soi-disant Mrs. Draycott, drawing an oblong slip of paper from her bosom and handing it to the lawyer. "Read that and look at what I made him sign on the back."

"Its a marriage certificate," said Mr. Reeves, glancing at it; and turning it over he read aloud as follows: "I Joseph Popplewell, do acknowledge that my housekeeper, Mrs. Draycott, is my lawful wife, which I married under the name of Mary Saunders in 18—, and I, Mary Popplewell or Draycott, do hereby swear that if my husband, Joseph Popplewell, leaves me £2,000 by his will, I will keep his marriage secret."

"This extraordinary document purports to be signed by both parties," added the lawyer, handling the paper reverently, "and I must say that upon the face of it, taken in conjunction with the certificate, it appears to be incontestible evidence."

"Who gets the money now, then?" demanded the same person who had asked the question before.

"Well, gentlemen, I am sorry to say that Mr. Silas Popplewell, being, unfortunately for himself, nullius filius, or illegitimate, can inherit nothing," replied Mr. Reeves. "The estate will, therefore, be divided between the lawful widow of the deceased and the next of kin, according to the statute."

The excitement of the audience at this announcement found vent in a hoarse cheer, in the midst of which poor Silas sank into a chair in a half-fainting condition. He now understood—too late, alas!—what had caused his father suddenly to make a will, and he was also keenly conscious of the fact that, having borne witness to its alleged revocation, it was out of the question to endeavor to set it up again. He was aroused from his bitter reflections by the touch of the housekeeper upon his shoulder.

"Cheer up, my lad," she said roughly, but not unkindly; "I did not know it would be so bad for you as this, but I don't pity you less because I suspect you've brought it on yourself. Now, I won't make any rash promises, because I don't know how much money I'm going to get. But you shall have the £2,000 you grudged to me, even if I don't receive a farthing more."

Popularity of the Tricycle.

The tricycle is evidently becoming a favorite vehicle of the velocipede class, not merely amongst those who ride for pleasure or exercise, but also among those who require some means of getting over ground quickly in the pursuit of their business. In the case of families living in the country who can afford only one velocipede, the choice is readily made, for while the bicycle might suit paterfamilias and the boys, it is useless for the girls. The disadvantage of the three-wheeled machine is the greater labor required to propel it, especially on country roads, where the three tracks made by the wheels add considerably to the resistance, while the bicycle bowls easily in a rut made by a cart; the advantage of this tricycle is that the rider can stop without dismounting, and can also carry a number of parcels. The Post Office has appreciated the latter fact, and many rural postmen are now provided with a machine, but when the parcels post comes into full work there will be a greater demand for the useful carriage. Considerable use is already made of the tricycle in London by "town travellers" who have only small samples to carry, and we have seen it utilized by enterprising "news agents" for delivering newspapers to the shops in the suburbs. "Niggers" and other peripatetic entertainers are also investing in tricycles, as they find that mode of travelling cheaper than the railways, with the great advantage that it leaves their movements independent of time-tables.

A Blind Man Who Sees.

The case of Prof. Fawcett, who is a member of the British Cabinet, has often excited the wonder of those who think vision is indispensable to the transaction of the work of life. He writes books, makes speeches, and is one of the most efficient heads the post office of Great Britain ever had. Now comes to the front another remarkable blind man, M. J. Plateau, of the Royal Academy of Belgium, who for the last forty years has been so totally blind that he may direct his face to the sun without being sensible of the least objective clearness. His researches into the phenomena of light have excited the admiration of his fellow-scientists; his experiments, for example, on the wonderful colors of soap-bubbles are exquisitely beautiful. M. Plateau has just published a little paper on the sensations which he experiences in his eyes, which is not only interesting but calculated to be of practical value. The results of his researches are too elaborate to be given here, but are the wonder of scien ists whose sight is unimpaired.

Arabi's Chances.

Arabi says he surrendered to Englishmen and would have escaped had he known he was to be tried by Egyptians. He and Toulba Pasha have been removed to the Gards Meubles, where eighty other prisoners were also removed. The prelimenary examination in the case of Arabi was held secretly. His formal trial will be public. He has telegraphed here for counsel. The persons applied to decline to defend him because they are afraid of losing clients. Arabi will probably be convicted with ease. De Lesseps telegraphed the President of the Court-martial by which Arabi is being tried that during the war Arabi exerted himself to maintain the neutrality of the Suez Canal, and protected the lives and interests of several Europeans in Egypt.

PERSONAL.

The Khedive will give medals to the entire British army engaged in the Egyptian campaign. Those of the soldiers will be of copper, and the officers of silver.

On Aug. 21 the King of Sweden, presiding at the annual festival of the Order of St. Olaf, in his palace, cancelled the knighthood of Baron Hoffmann of Vienna, discreditably implicated in certain financial undertakings at Vienna.

Mr. E. Duclaux, a French chemist, thinks that he has discovered that the flavour of cheese is determined by germs in the atmosphere, which takes the form of fungus mould. In which case it may prove practicable to inoculate cheeses.

"Herbert Spencer," says the Boston Globe, somewhat inelegantly, "is slouching around amongst the people of this country, asking questions of anybody he happens to meet, and the chances are that he will learn more about us than any Englishman who has crossed the Atlantic for years."

On September 23rd, Prince Bismarck celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his entrance into office as the head of the Prussian Ministry. Among the tokens received by him on that day was a magnificent silver punch-bowl, with stand, ladle, and six goblets, from the German colony of Odessa.

The uncle of Lord Wolseley's great grandfather was the Colonel Wolseley who, in the old "No Popery" days, gained the battle of Newtonbutler, and caused the Mayor of Scarborough to be well tossed in a blanket in the market-place for making a speech in favour of King James.

There are five Peers in the House of Lords over eighty—Lord Shedbroke, who is 88; Lord Eversley, 88; Lord Mostyn, 87; Lord Wemyss, 86; Lord Albemarle, 83. It is the fashion to picture the House of Lords as a body of feeble old men. The great majority are under 60, with a contingent under 30.

Leclanche, the famous French electrician, who died the other day, was only forty-three years old. He left an enormous fortune to his young wife and two babies. In politics he was one of the most irreconcilable Radicals in Rochefort's clique. It is stated that he bequeathed to the Louvre a superb art collection, on condition that it shall be placed in a hall bearing his name.

The London Figaro says that Adelina Patti is reported to have accepted an engagement for South America during the season of 1884 at so high a rate that, should she economize her salary during her 1882–3 season in the United States, and her South American fees, her fortune will be large enough to enable her to "reject with scorn the paltry few hundred guineas a night she is likely to be promised elsewhere."

Edmund Yates, editor of the World, in his daily ride in Rotten Row, is described as "a tall, powerful cavalier weighing at least sixteen stone, mounted on a powerful black horse. The rider sits his horse fairly well for a park practitioner, appears to enjoy his exercise very much, and to know nearly everybody worth knowing. The Prince of Wales nods pleasantly to him, gold-sticks and silver-sticks chat with him, members of Parliament, and peers of the realm, cross-country baronets like Sir George Wombwell, Royal Academicians like Mr. Frith, actors and managers like Mr. Bancroft, Mr. Wyndham, and Mr. Hare, are on the best of terms with him as he canters along totus, teres atque rotunqus.

A Prussian provincial composer has produced what he calls an "Egg Polka." Its purpose is eminently practical, as may be gathered from the following "Directions for Use," printed an the back of each copy: "Let the polka be placed, open at the first page, upon the pianoforte desk. Then drop the egg into a pipkin half full of boiling water. Set the pipkin on the fire. Then play the polka through in strict time, as per metronome indication. On completing its last bar the egg will be cooked to a turn—that is, its yolk will be fluent, and its white about as yielding to the touch as the flesh of a ripe plum. Those who wish their eggs hard set will play the polka andante maestoso. The contrary effect will be produced by an allegro vivace rendering of the composition."

Judge Lawson, who has created such a sensation by the fine and imprisonment of High Sheriff Dwyer Gray, is low-sized, stout, very near-sighted, with a rather forbidding expression, and waddles in his walk. He is a native of Waterford, and 65 years of age. His career in Trinity College was distinguished. He was a scholar, moderator, and gold medallist, took double first honors, and succeeded the late Isaac Butt as Professor of Political Economy in 1841. His career at the bar was equally distinguished. He was called in 1840, took silk in 1857, became sergeant in 1860, Solicitor-General in 1861, Attorney General in 1865, and in 1868 was made Judge of the Common Pleas, from which he has been recently transferred to the Queen's Bench. He is regarded as being, with Sullivan, the Master of the Rolls, the best black-letter lawyer on the Irish bench. He was member for Portarlington, the smallest borough in Ireland, from 1865 to 1868, but was a failure in the House, his style and delivery being weak.

The Russian composer P. Tchaikovsky had written a new overture, "The Year 1812," which is said to surpass all his previous works. It was in 1812 that the Russians rallied to the defence of their country against Napoleon and the Grand Army. In commemoration of that event the grand Cathedral of Christ the Savior was erected in Moscow, which took fifty years in building. Tchaikovsky prepared his overture especially for the consecration of this cathedral. Recently, at the Moscow Industrial Exhibition, "The Year 1812" was performed for the first time, and the Muscovites were wild about it. The overture is composed exclusively of Russian national airs. It begins with a grand church hymn, "God, Save Thy People," and embraces a number of soldier songs of 1812. Then follows "The Battle," with the ringing of bells, the beating of drums, the shouting of the combatants, and the groans of the wounded and dying, after which the noise of battle dies away, and the clergy lead the Russian people in a grand thanks-giving hymn. Several Russian and Slav marches are also effectively rendered. The overture ends with the Russian national hymn, "God Save the Czar."

Storming a Rat's Stronghold.

I was once present when a very old rick which had lain with other property in Chancery for a long time, was pulled down. I shall never forget the scene. In the rick there were hundreds—I believe it would be no exaggeration to say thousands—of rats. It was riddled, honey-combed by them. How it had preserved its shape and apparent integrity so long was a mystery, for masses of it fell in and seemed to vanish to powdery nothingness when it was disturbed. Of course, the presence of the omnivorous vermin and their multitude was well known, and all available preparations made for giving them a warm reception when evicted. Nets were drawn around, sturdy men and boys stood behind them armed with stout cudgels, and bludgeons, and dogs of all degrees, mustered from the various farms and villages of the countryside for miles around—sheep-dogs, collies, setters, pointers, spaniels, retrievers, bull-dogs even, with curs and mongrels of every breed and every breed and no breed at all. Then the work began; it was a ratty nightmare. At first little was to be seen of them but their tails, as they darted in further towards the centre of their stronghold to escape from the disturbance; but as the storming of the castle proceeded, they seemed determined simultan ously to desert, and poured forth as if at a given signal from within. There was a great heave, a black fl od overflowed the top, and ran in torrents; black streams spurted from the sides and welled and bubbled from underneath; the rick, the ground, the nets, the very air seemed alive with leaping, tumbling, rushing, squeaking rats, which, with the shouts of bystanders, the barking and snarling of the dogs, the cries of excitement from their owners, and the blows of sticks and flails made up a Pandemonium of sights and sounds more like the chaotic phantasy of some madman's dream than any matter-of-fact reality. Dogs and men worked with a will, and the result was a goodly heap of battered carcasses; I forget how many were killed, but they did not represent one tithe, no, nor one twentieth part of the number that got away free.

A Temperance General.

It was recently reported that Sir Garnet Wolseley is a total abstainer from intoxicating beverages. A man who sat by the side of him at dinner found that he left his wine glass untouched, and that that was his habit. Of course, the temperance people will make much of that alleged fact. The greatest, or at least the most successful English general of this day is a teetotaler. His success they will attribute to his abstemiousness, which is all the more remarkable in a soldier, or, at any rate, they will claim that the triumph of the English arms in Egypt has been greatly helped by the sobriety of the general in command. And they will have good reason for their claim. Undoubtedly a sober General is more trustworthy than one who relies on stimulants to bolster him up when the occasion is trying. No man can be trusted to work which requires good judgment if he is much addicted to drink. Alcohol very easily affects the balance of the faculties, and therefore the less people who need to keep their heads about them take of it the better they are off. Drinking is the great vice of armies, and yet nowhere else does a man require that all his faculties shall be normal more than when in the charge of troops in the field, especially when he is high in command. If Sir Garnet Wolseley is a teetotaler, he is a wise man. He is in better physical condition to stand the different climates to which military service may take him, and intellectually he keeps himself better poised than if he followed the drinking customs of the run of army officers. His mind is clearer, and he can trust his judgment. How many thousands of lives would have been saved in our war, for instance, if the Generals had all been as sober as Wolseley is said to be. We observe that among Englishmen of education and ability, who carry the load of extensive affairs, the tendency is toward increasing abstemiousness, and that even total abstainers are growing numerous. It is a tendency which we commend to the thoughtful attention of our men in public life, our professional and business men.—New York Sun.

Claims for Compensation.

The Dublin Gazette contained recently further notices of claims, under the Prevention of Crime Act, for compensation for outrages committed upon persons in the counties of Roscommon, Cork, Mayo, Sligo, Clare, Queen's County, Tipperary, Galway and Leitrim. Amongst them is a claim for £—000 by John Dillon, of Carnacarta, Mayo, for the murder of his father; a claim by Mrs. Henry F. Blake, of Rathville, Galway, on her own behalf and that of her children, for the murder of her husband and personal injuries to herself by being wounded at the time of the assassination; one by J. Connor, of Kilsaniff, Galway, on behalf of herself and children, for the murder of her husband; one of £20,000 by Isadore William Bourke, of Rahassano Park, Galway, for the murder of his brother, Walter M. Bourke; and a claim by Mrs. Dempsay, of Riverdale, Galway, on behalf of herself and family, for the murder of her husband.

A Hint to Letter Writers.

To be accurate in little things is the way to become accurate in everything. And no one knows how many of the great annoyances of life spring from little habits of carelessness, and the little inaccuracies of detail, which one is often content to let go rather than make, at the proper time, the slight exertion necessary to complete a seemingly unimportant duty. A hint in this line may be drawn from a recent letter of a New England professor, whose letters are always marked by clearness of penmanship and minute attention to punctuation. He writes:

I do not know that I ever told you that in subscribing a letter, I write the name of the State in full. I do so under the advice of a post-office official. "Sir," said he, "clerks in their hurry rarely look at anything but the name of the State. And if a letter gets into the right State, it will easily get into the right town. I have followed the advice, and found my account in it."—N. S. Times.

Hath crossed my hands?

Have they drawn folds of calm
Some heart around,
Or touched with pity's balm
A rugged wound?

AN ARMY OF COWARDS.

Egyptian Troops—How they Fled in Previous Wars and Were Butchered—Causes of their Poltroonery—Arabi Bey.

t was my fortune—good or ill, it is hard ay—to spend something over two years Egypt, in the service of the late Khedive, ail Pasha, as an officer of engineers in army. I lived in Cairo with my family, daily in intimate association with the ive population, and had charge, as chief he Third Section, of the general staff of Topographical Bureau.

ince the days of Mehemed Ali and his t warrior son, Ibrahim Pasha, Egypt entirely lost her military prestige ; she had no recent victories of any impor- ce. In 1875 the Egyptian troops under f Pasha made a successful attack upon rrar, a walled town of the Sumalis. With single exception, all of their recent itary efforts have been most disastrous ures. I need only mention the series of ible catastrophes attending the abortive empts at conquest in Abyssinia during the rs 1875 and 1876. The writer was one of unfortunates who participated in those lorious undertakings, and knows where- he speaks. The first expedition into yssinia was under Col. Arendrup, a nish officer in the service of the Khedive. commanded a column of troops of all ns, numbering about 3,500 men. They e apparently excellent troops, were well anised, well drilled, well armed, and l equipped in every way, and yet on the y first encounter with the Abyssinians entire force engaged was literally wiped of existence. Only a few desperately unded, maimed, and mutilated men, who e left as dead by their ruthless foes, re the survivors of that bloody fight. ese wretched sufferers, with wonderful ality, crawled off the field of carnage, hid emselves by day in the caves and jungles, on wild fruits and berries, dragged their tering limbs along at night, and reached ssowah, some of them weeks after the ttle, and told the horrible tale.

To wipe out this disgrace and avenge this feat, a large army, which ultimately mbered fully 20,000 men, equally as well pointed in all respects, as the other force, s sent into Abyssinia. They reached e Abyssinian plateau without resistance, d about 12,000 of them at one time were gaged with the hordes of King John. Of that met the King in the open field but ry few returned to the two forts which rmed the flanks of their positions. I have intention of giving a description of this ttle of Gura, as it is called, but simply of owing the fighting capacity of the Egyp- n troops. The position occupied by the gyptian army was an excellent one ; they re on the open, nearly level plain, them- ves posted on the rising ground ; they re splendidly equipped with Remington eech-loading rifles ; their artillery was mposed of French mountain howitzers. nglish steel guns, and German Krupps, be- des a fine rocket battery ; their cavalry as magnificently mounted and perfectly med ; they were commanded by the Com- ander-in-Chief of the Egyptian army, and s best officers ; they had some dozen or ore American and European staff officers encourage them, exhort them, and set em a good example. King John attacked em squarely in front, with his host of ked, bare-footed, bare-headed warriors, ho had but few firearms, no artillery, no rganization—nothing military, in fact, but ourage. And yet, in one hour and a half, l of 7,000 troops who were outside of the orts, except a bare hundred, were killed or aptured by the Abyssinians, who rushed pon them with sword and spear and shield, d slaughtered them like sheep in the hambles. The loss of the Abyssinians was bout 150 men !

The bare statements of facts make com- ent unnecessary. How it all happened it s difficult to tell. Col. Dye, who was in he battle, wrote a book to explain it, but id not succeed, I think even to his own sat- sfaction. Why it so happened is easier to nswer, and the answer is this : the Egyp- ians will not, cannot fight. A disaster qually complete, but on a smaller scale, ecurred to a column of Egyptian troops nder Manzinger Pasha, nearly contempor- neously with the Arendrup tragedy. This olumn was marching through the Galla ountry to co-operate with Arendrup, and hen several days' journey from Tujurrah was attacked at night by the natives, and bsolutely annihilated. The writer saw one f the victims of this catastrophe, who es- aped because his wounds were thought to e certainly fatal. He was an officer of en- ineers.

The events thus briefly epitomized plainly lemonstrate the lack of fighting qualities of he Egyptians. Now, the question naturally arises. Why are they thus utterly worth- ess as soldiers? That question it is the main object of this article to answer. There re two classes of soldiers in the ranks of he Egyptian army. The smaller classes onsist of Nubians, Darfurians, Sudanese, and Berbers from up the Nile. Many, in fact it is said that most of them, are slaves, either taken or bought from the regular slave hunters and traders of the interior, and liberated by the late Khedive Ismail, by be- ng placed in the army. However recruited, hey constituted the only fighting part of he army in the Abyssinian campaign, and hey were vastly inferior to the colored troops of the Union army during the late ivil war. They have some soldierly quali- ies ; they are strong, hard, able-bodied men, an stand heat and hard work and long marches well ; they are docile, obedient, and eemed to learn the routine duties of military life readily, and perhaps under good officers might make fairly good soldiers.

The larger part of the Egyptian army is made up of recruits taken by conscription from the villages and fields of the lower delta. These fellaheen are the most abject slaves, and have been so for hundreds of years. They are not slaves of a single owner who would be responsible for their welfare, and would profit by their well-being, as was the case with the former slaves of the South. They are the slaves of the soil upon which they live, and of every man who occupies a higher position in life than they, from their own sheik-el-beled to the Khedive. Every effendi, bey, and pasha with whom they come in contact in any way whatever looks upon them as different beings from himself, calls them habitually "ebu-el-kelb," sons of dogs, and kicks, cuffs, and beats them ad libitum. In consequence of this bad treatment, and by heredity, they are low, mean, cowardly, and cringing beyond any people on the face of the earth. And the manner in which they are drafted into the army, and the way they are subsequently treated by their officers, does not in the least way improve them. They are dragged from their fields while at work or snatched from their mud huts, chained together in gangs, and carried to the citadel, and there kept in close imprisonment until they are drilled and uniformed. They are not allowed to settle their own affairs, to make any provision for their families, or even to bid their wives and children farewell, when the time for their conscription comes. When the recruiting sergeants lay hands upon them, it is as if a sudden and terrible death had claimed them, and they are mourned and wept over by friends and relatives as if they were dead.

Once become soldiers, and branded as it were by the uniform, escape from the ranks, until term of service expires, is impossible. Desertion is generally punished by death, even in time of peace. They are treated by their officers no better than they were by their task-masters in the fields. The courbash is the instrument of punishment for every trivial offence, in spite of the fact that flogging is prohibited by law. Not only is the common soldier whipped by his company officers, from Sergeant to Captain, but even the subaltern officers are subjected to the same indignity by their superiors. The writer once saw a Lieutenant held down by two men of his own company, while his Colonel beat him unmercifully with a walking cane. When the beating was finished by the bey's becoming exhausted, the Lieutenant arose, took off his sword and handed it to his superior, and said : "You have disgraced me in the presence of my own men : I am no longer worthy to be an officer ; put me in the ranks." For this, the only manly act I ever witnessed among these people, the Lieutenant was charged with insubordination and mutinous conduct, was tried by court martial, was sentenced to be shot, and I saw the sentence put into execution.

No wonder, then, that such a people—so treated when in civil life that every spark of manhood is crushed out of them, and so abused as soldiers that they have not even the courage of a crushed worm, which strives to sting the heel of its destroyer—no wonder such a people will not fight. And the inglorious termination of Arabi Pasha's wretched attempt at revolution is but the legitimate result of his and his deluded followers' antecedents. No one who knew him and his people had any doubt how the affair would end from its very incipiency. I made Arabi's acquaintance in Abyssinia. He was then a Lieutenant-Colonel. After the Egyptian army was defeated by King John, Arabi was made an envoy, and sent to the King with presents and bribes, and propositions for peace. He was so far successful in his miss on that King John gave the Egyptian army an opportunity to retreat from his country without molestation.

Sir Garnet Wolseley has conducted the attack upon the Egyptians in a manner altogether admirable. His taking Ismailia for his base of operations put him on the shortest line of march to Cairo. His gradually forcing the enemy back until he could get all of his forces together at their strongest point may have looked to some unwise and unmilitary, but it was exactly the right thing to do with the foe he had. In this way he was enabled to deal one deadly blow and end the war at once. Finally, the manner of engaging the Egyptians showed his knowledge of their calibre and his skill. He went at them with a rush, as the Abyssinians did, and that was the end of the whole matter.—S. H. L. in the New York Evening Post.

Not that Kind of a Man.

The seventh passenger was a lady. There was an abundance of room in the car, but as she entered an elderly man rose up with a great flourish and called out : "Take my seat, madame, I am not the kind of a man to keep a seat in the street-car and oblige a lady to stand up." She sank down with a half-bow in acknowledgment, and he held out his hand for her fare with the remark : "Some men are brutal enough to permit a lady to stumble to the fare-box and back, but that isn't me." He took her ticket and deposited it, and then hung to the strap, and continued : "And I know men who think that passing a lady's fare to the box gives them the privilege of entering into conversation with her about the weather, crops, rate of mortality politics, etc. That isn't me, however." The speech had its due effect upon all the other passengers, including the victim, and the man let out another link by remarking : "Giving up my seat in a car to a lady does not entitle me to offer to assist h r off the car, or ask if she is married or single, or in any manner break down the stern barriers of social formality, and I know it. It is simply an act of courtesy, and I shall so consider it." There was something painful in the situation to the other six, but relief came by the man reaching the end of his journey. As he was ready to get off he looked back and said : "I have seen men whose conceit obliged them to lift their hat and bow to everybody in the car before stepping off, but that isn't me. I shall step off without any formality and without hoping that I will be missed." When the six looked back and saw him sprawled in the dust they were glad of it.—Detroit Free Press.

In Mr. Spurgeon's church in London the regular hearers absent themselves one Sunday evening every three months, and the house is given up to strangers. But in many parishes in this country the some thing is done every Sunday evening.

IRON-CLADS AS FIGHTERS.

Conclusions Drawn From Experience Since the Monitor's Time.

Vice-Admiral von Henck has published an article in a military periodical on the value of iron-clads with reference to the bombardment of Alexandria. As military history has as yet furnished but few materials for forming a final judgment as to the value of iron-plating for ships, the purposes aimed at in its introduction, and the question whether these purposes have really been attained, the writer thinks it desirable to draw as many lessons as possible from every event in this field, and thus to increase our experience.

He begins with a history of iron-plating. The introduction of shell guns, soon after 1850, much diminished the value of Nelson's battle ships, with 80 or 100 guns. The necessity of protecting ships of war better against artillery became still more urgent when the introduction of steam made their construction more complicated and thus increased their vulnerability. In the Crimean war the Russian shells did great execution on ships. Opinions differed greatly, however, especially in England, as to the value of iron-clads and the necessity of their introduction, until the fight of the Confederate ship Merrimac with the wooden ships of the Union in Hampton Roads, and her fight with the Monitor, placed the great superiority of iron-clads beyond a doubt. On the 8th of March, 1862, the Merrimac attacked four wooden frigates and completely destroyed two of them. Next day she unexpectedly met the iron-clad battery-ship Monitor, a mere dwarf in comparison, and was compelled to retreat, severely damaged. The impression made by this fact was enormous, and it showed two things—the necessity of iron-plating for battle-ships, and of arming them with guns of large calibre and great piercing power.

The first opportunity of estimating the value of iron-plating in a conflict, ship to ship, on the high seas, was afforded by the battle of Lissa on the 20th July, 1866. In that action the relations between armor and guns were about the same as they are now. Seven Austrian iron-clads were opposed to 11 Italian, The armor of the ships were pretty equal in strength on both sides ; the Italians were stronger in artillery. The result is well known. Deducting 630 who perished with the Re d'Italia and the Palastro, the Italians lost only 110 men out of 5,000. The total loss on the Austrian side was 39 killed and 124 wounded out of 7,000, the loss on the unarmored ship Kaiser being 22 killed and 82 wounded, that is, two-thirds of the whole. The battle of Lissa was an eloquent advocate for the incipient system of iron-plating ships of war.

In the war in South America in 1877 two unarmored English ships had difficulty in repulsing the attack of the Peruvian monitor Huascar, and had in the end to let it go unmolested. Of that new, malignant, and deceitful weapon, the fish torpedo, we have as yet no experience, for the published reports of the Russo-Turkish war are so untrustworthy that one can found no opinion on them. The result of observation up to this date may be condensed as follows : First, unarmoured ships cannot maintain a fight of any duration against the heavy guns of ships and forts : secondly, iron-plating is still an effectual defense against the heaviest guns, and consequently indispensable for battle-ships ; thirdly, rams and torpedoes are, indeed, formidable weapons in sea fighting, but cannot supersede artillery as the chief weapon, and they promise more chance of success in iron-clads (because of their better protection against the enemy's artillery) than in unarmored ships.—Berlin Special Dispatch to the London Times.

Queen Caroline and her Scapegrace Husband.

The most extraordinary glimpses we get of the unhappy married life of the Princes Caroline are to be found in the diary kept by Lady Charlotte Bury, and published anonymously in 1838. This diary has furnished the chief materials for all the works which have been written upon the times of George IV. On one occasion, says the writer, she dined at Kensington, when "the Princess gave a long detailed account of her marriage, and the circumstances which brought it about. "I, you know, was the victim of Mammon ; the Prince of Wales' debts must be paid, and poor little I's person was the pretense. Parliament would vote supplies for the heir apparent's marriage ; the King would help his little help. A Protestant Princess must be found ; they fixed upon the Prince's cousin. To tell you God's truth, (a favorite expression,) I always hated it ; but to oblige my father—anything. But the first moment I saw my futur and Lady Jersey together I knew how it all was, and I said to myself, 'O very well.' I took my partie—and so it would have been if— But, Oh, mine God !' she added, throwing up her head, 'I could be the slave of a man I love, but to one whom I loved not, and who did not love me—impossible—c'estre autre chose. One of the civil things his Royal Highness did just at first was to find fault with my shoes, and as I was very young and lively in those days I told him to make me a better pair and bring them to me. I brought letters from all the Princes and Princesses to him from all the petty courts, and I tossed them to him and said, 'There, that's to prove I'm not an impostor !'" On another occasion, referring to her wretched marriage day, the Princess said : "Judge what it was to have a drunken husband on one's wedding day, and one who passed the greatest part of his bridal night under the grate, where he fell, and where I left him. If anybody say to me at this moment will you pass your life over again or be killed? I would choose death, for, you know, a little sooner or lat r we must all die, but to live a life of wretchedness twice over—Oh, mine God, no !"—Belgravia.

The signal service is now ready to announce the approach of cyclones over six hours in advance This will give most men time to pay old debts and retu n borrowed tools.

A Pony Ranch in Texas.—A Texas paper describes an 8,000 acre ranch in that State entirely devoted to the breeding of ponies for children. The breeding stock consists of seven Shetland stallions and forty-five mares, all thoroughbred, and two hundred small spotted pony mares. These little ponies range over the prairies like sheep, and are described as very gentle.

PERSONAL.

Pasquale Farala of Naples, bequeathed to Queen Victoria an unpublished opera, "to be performed for the benefit of the poor of London," and $3,600 for the purpose of granting yearly forever three marriage portions of $60 each for three poor girls of London between the ages of 16 and 25, who are to be chosen by lot. The double bequest has been made known to the Government of London through the regular channels of formality, and the tortuous official course of getting possession of the treasures has begun. Meantime the English press has shown a disposition to make light of this benefaction.

Mr. Spurgeon, though in much better health than when he preached last spring, still bears traces of the sufferings he has undergone. His feet are gouty, and this detracts from the promptness and agility with which he ascended to the pulpit in former times, when the female members of his congregation would rise and peep over each other's shoulders to watch his movements. His hands are swollen and twisted with rheumatic gout so that his gesture is no longer free and unconstrained as of old, but his voice still possesses that charm and variety of tone which in times past have overcome the scruples of the most obdurate.

A London paper says that the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has signified his intention to contest Whitby at the next general election. The Prince, who is well known and highly esteemed by all classes in Whitby, was asked to oppose Mr. W. H. Gladstone, the eldest son of the Premier, but was obliged to decline the invitation for the reasons that he was not then prepared. Now, however, the Prince is determined to be in good time. The Maharajah rented for several years Malgrave Castle, Lord Norbenby's seat near Whitby. He is about 46, and has an allowance of $125,000 a year from the British Indian Government, but has been much embarrassed of late years by reason of his expensive style of living.

Bertha Rothschild, who renounced Judaism to marry the Prince Alexander de Wagram, bringing to him an income of $150,000 a year, is spending her honeymoon at his chateau in a suburb of Paris. This is a grand place, called Bois, though not so pleasantly situated as when Napoleon gave it to Marshal Berthier. It had belonged to a noble family that had emigrated, and it had become national property. The first Emperor was liberal in giving such estates to his military followers, who, in accepting them, bound themselves over to join in no conspiracy which had for its object the bringing back of the Bourbons and the old aristocracy. The Prince de Wagram succeeded in having the grounds cut across by two railroads, in order to replenish his treasury by obtaining excessive damages, which he did through official connivance. The money enabled him to secure brilliant matches for two of his daughters. The third married Prince Joachim Murat as the Emperor was declining, and has since been obliged to ask her father for that income with which it was expected the Emperor would keep his cousin Joachin supplied.

The Camp-Meeting.

The old-time camp-meeting is no more. So much has been shown by the experience of the past ten years. They were very earnest gatherings in the olden time. The devil was wrestled with and souls saved from perdition ; at least good Christians thought so. As the Methodist says : "The camp-meeting of fifty years ago no longer exists, and that which we now have, while it bears the name and the traditions of its ancestor, has really developed into quite another thing. Our new-fashioned gatherings at the groves or by the seaside—for rest and recreation—possibly in part for gossip and display, with a very mild infusion of religion—or else for the promotion of some specialty—must not be looked to as to any considerable extent among the evangelistic agencies through which souls are to be saved. As an inexpensive device for summer outdoor holidays, with the accompaniment of religious restraints to guard against dangerous excesses, and of religious exercises for agreeable and not altogether unprofitable pastimes, these gatherings may have their use." Then it is also a fact that a land speculation is often at the bottom of these summer religious resorts. Still they do good and should be encouraged, even if they are not what they were.

A Subterranean Abyss Swallows up a Child.

The Zirknitz See, in Carniola, is remarkable for the periodical disappearance of the water every summer, subterranean passages serving as the channels of escape. A rapidly-ripening crop of grass and some quick-growing vegetables are gathered during the autumn from the dried bed of the lake by the neighboring peasants. A letter from Laybach reports a singular accident of which this place was the theatre. A peasant woman and her daughter were being conveyed in a cart across the bed of the lake, which was still covered with water in some places. Suddenly the cart and its occupants were precipitated into a chasm, through which the water was being swallowed down in a great vortex, and which had not been noticed till too late. With great difficulty the woman was rescued, but the child and cart were sucked down into the abyss below.—London Times.

Thrift of French Women.

French women, often stigmatized as the most frivolous of their kind, are, in reality the most thrifty—a virtue that frequently degenerates into absolute parsimony. I saw a striking instance of making the best of unregarded trifles the other day when dining with one who certainly has a reputation for prudence. A cherry pie had been on the table, and the mistress gave strict injunctions that all the stones were to be scraped from the plates and placed in her store-room. I ventured to ask the reason, and was told that not only cherry, but plum, peach and all manner of stones, whether cooked or raw, were invariably saved, gently dried in the oven and kept in a great jar. "Then," said madame, "in the winter, when the fire burns clear and bright in the evening, I fetch a handful and throw them among the glowing coals. They crack and splutter for a moment, send up a brilliant flame, and the whole room is filled with a delicious odor." —Paris Letter.

There is a young man in Port Hope whose surname is Lot. And though he is an agreeable fellow and well fixed financially, he remains a bachelor. The girls are, somehow, kind of shy of the name.

The most fashionable thing in society now is a baby, and a young mother with a pretty infant is the envy of her sex. N. B.—Both mother and baby must be richly dressed, otherwise the couple are only a woman and a brat.

"How are the supplies, Dinah?" asked a gentleman of his colored cook just before starting down town. "Well, sah," responded the sable mistress of the kitchen, "I tink dah is combustibles enough to last till to-morrow."

"See here, my dear, how beautifully the sun brings out the dewdrops this morning. They glisten like — like——" "Like diamonds, pa. They remind me ever so much of some I saw yesterday." The old gentleman turned the conversation immediately, but the diamonds have got to be bought.

"I say, old fellow, where is your sweetheart—the girl you're engaged to? She is here to-night, ain't s e?" "She is, Do you see that blonde in pink over there?" "That magnificent creature with the dark eyes?" "Yes." "By jove, old boy——" "My girl is the one alongside of her on the left."

"Oh, I've just had such a scare !" exclaimed a prim and pale housewife ; "I feel as if I should faint." "Why, what's the matter?" was asked. "Well," she replied, "you may not believe it, but as sure as I live that new girl deliberately opened the parlor shutters and the sun was shining right in."

A society drama was presented at the theatre at Salt Lake City recently, but when in the third act the husband began to rave and tear round because his wife had run away with another man, the audience with one accord arose from their seats and exclaimed : "The idea of making all this fuss about one woman !" and left the place in disgust.

When the conductor tore off the coupon from the ticket of a lady passenger on the Grand Trunk railroad the other day, she threw the remainder out of the window, and subsequently explained that she had seen him tear the ticket up, and thought the piece was of no account, and we'll wager she laid all the blame on the conductor and called him a fool, too.

It never rains but it pours. A Newport visitor, after a long struggle, managed to get foothold in society, and all of a sudden found that she had been invited to nine dinner parties, all on the same evening. Utterly unable to decide which to accept, she sat down and had a good cry over it, and that made her eyes and nose so red that she was ashamed to go to any.

An elderly Scotch woman went one day to an apothecary's shop with a prescription for two grains of calomel for a child. Seeing the druggist weigh the medicine with scrupulous exactness, and not thinking he did this from anxiety not to get an overdose, but from his penuriousness or desire to give as little as possible for the money, she said : "Dinna be she mean wi' it, man, ; it for a puir fatherless baird."

Novel Reading.

Excessive novel reading is a rapidly growing evil. It has been called a sort of mental dram drinking, and truly its effects are not dissimilar. The appetite for fascinating literature grows as it is indulged, and it appears that the taste becomes vitiated after a time. Just as a man starts drinking light wines finds these grow insipid after a time, and resorts to something more fiery to tickle his abused palate, so the novel reader adds that he must resort to more and more sensational food to gratify a debased mind. The evils of novel reading are insidious, and can seldom be clearly traced home, as in the case of the highly connected clerk of the United States Senate who became insane owing to the practice.

MARKDALE, OCT. 12TH, 1882.

EUPHRASIA FALL SHOW.

The fall exhibition of Euphrasia Agricultural Society took place in the society's ground at Rocklyn, on Wednesday the 4th inst. The weather was warm and beautiful, and there was a goodly number of spectators. Our first strike on arriving was for dinner, it being about 12 o'clock. A drive of some 13 miles on a fine day has a good effect on the appetite. We were not alone however, as hundreds were well served with the best the country could afford at McConnell's Hotel.

A very good show of horses was exhibited. James Bowes, jr., of St. Vincent, had a heavy draught team which would be hard to beat in the province.

The show in cattle was not up to former years.

Sheep and hogs were also below the average in number.

The show in the hall was far short of last year, but what was shown was of a good class. It is hard to account for the falling off in the number of entries. The receipts at the gate however were quite satisfactory; The following is the

"OUR BANKRUPT KINGS."

REPLY TO MR. RICHARDSON IN FLESHERTON "ADVANCE."

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

In a recent issue of the Flesherton Advance appears an article, over the name of M. Richardson, avowing that he had unintentionally given offence to a firm in Markdale who had made a splurge into business, etc. Now, the facts are, there is no one in this section of country dealing in or advertising bankrupt stocks for sale but ourselves, and the public recognize the fact that our goods are fresh and new and the very latest styles, and as seasonable goods as are to be found in any house north of Toronto. Our friend's hypocrisy where he says "unintentionally," yet in the same sentence he states that we made a splurge, meaning thereby that our advent into Markdale was like unto a boy going into the water with a dash, creating bubbles and foam. Well, Mr. R., you never did that, for your grasping nature prevents you disposing of an article at ordinary profits. We sell, and will continue to sell, as cheap and cheaper than any house in the trade. Our business connections with wholesale men reaches as far back, or further back than yours, or the one-horse concern that first enabled you to get your first stock, no larger than an ordinary Aberdeen pedlar. We may be "boys" and trust that youth is no disgrace, more especially when we never contravened the laws of our country in any respect; but what must be or may be said of the hoary head who would attempt to ruin youthful enterprise and stifle honorable ambition. We may be "tyros," but if a life long practice to a profession entitles us to that appellation what shall we style the clock cleaner who came to Flesherton some few short years ago and donned the uniform of merchant? He pretends not to be jealous of our business success, but it is more than probable that he is the catspaw for the business powers that created him. If you are so serene about the "passing breeze these boys are making" why put yourself to so much trouble and expense to notice their business? Is it your philanthropy to give them gratis advertising? Or is it not more likely the sinister malevalance of an evil mind to destroy that which you cannot obtain yourself. Both of us were born and bred in this section of country; our antecendents are patent to all. But the past of yourself is one of those trails we have no desire to follow. Probably it would have been impossible for you by prodigality to have wasted your parents' property, as it may not have been in your power to lay hands upon that which may have had no existence, therefore you need not advertise a virtue you never possessed. The public are getting their eyes opened and are rushing headlong to another store Mr. Richardson & Co.; and if the said company would lower their scale of prices to a rate corresponding with that of Trimble & Wright they would have the satisfaction of knowing that their week day practice was in accordance with their Sunday plans, who sells the cheapest? Let the public answer.

Yours, &c.,
TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

PROVIDENCE BAY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Notwithstanding the anticipation of a light crop after a cold, late spring the farmers of Manitoulin Island are rejoicing over an abundant harvest, it being the finest ever the Island produced. The fruit crop is of little note here yet as it is only newly settled, but doubtless it will be a good fruit growing section juaging from the flourishing condition presented by young orchards. There has been little or no fruit this season; it seems a favored spot in that respect. The rapidity of vegetation is unrivalled; it is astonishing to see the extraordinary growth during this summer.

The healthfulness of the climate is enticing many to its insular shores who desire to live in the fulness of that blessing, and who receive it to their full expectation. Many persons are also so fascinated by the salubrity of the climate its beautiful scenery and its growing importance, that they are choosing it for their homes, Is the land all taken up? This is a question frequently asked and generally answered in the affirmative. The land is mostly taken up, especially in the townships surrounding Providence Bay, which are admitted to form the choicest farming land on the Manitoulin. The beautiful lake Mindumor, a short distance from the village of Providence Bay, is surrounded by a portion of land seldom equalled in Ontario for beauty of position, fertility of soil, and good timbered woodlands. The soil is generally of choice clay land, but there are some farms of light sandy loam. Although the land is generally taken up, yet there are those who bought several hundreds of acres, and not being able to conveniently occupy the whole and having taxes to pay, would dispose of it at a reasonable or cheap rate; for this reason persons coming in to buy and settle would get a home without much trouble.

There are many lines of employment or business which this part of the island as yet stands in need of, and which could be commenced and carried on with good profit Among those blacksmithing might be especially mentiond. Two well settled townships, namely, Carnarvon in which Providence Bay is situated, and the adjoining one, Campbell, are without a blacksmith. There is a good opening for a man of that class, as $700 was made in a few months last year by one man. Any person who would come along would be welcomed by the farmers.

The late disaster, the loss of the steamer Asia, has cast quite a gloom over this neighborhood as well as many other places. Nearly every person you see has lost a friend. Tinkiss, the survivor, is well known here, as he was stopping at this place just before he took the memorable trip.

A REPLY TO "RATEPAYER."

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—As a reader of the STANDARD I wish to say something in reply to "Ratepayer." In the first place what is the object of the holidays? Is it not to the worn out teacher a means of recuperating the mind and body? "Ratepayer" appears to be one who thinks the more assiduously the mind is kept at work the more progress is made. In this he makes an error. Who should determine the length of the holidays, "Ratepayer" or our legislators? Again, is "Ratepayer" compelled to work when sick? No. But evidently he would make the teacher do so, possibly because he thinks the teacher the servant of all and not entitled to legal privileges with other citizens. Now, sir, I hope that when "Ratepayer" appears again in print he will have a better cause than trying to curtail the privileges of overworked and unthanked teachers.

A four-year-old son of Mr. James Elliott, of Artemesia, met with a very painful accident on Monday, (9th). The little fellow was near a cutting box, which was in motion. By some means his hand got caught by the cog wheels, and bruised between the wheels and the iron casings completely severing the first, third and fourth fingers from his hand; the second finger may possibly be saved.

Mrs. J. L. Browne, of Markdale, died at her father's residence, Egremont, on Wednesday, 4th inst. Mrs B. had made many warm friends in Markdale during the short time she lived here. Her disease was inflamatory rheumatism followed by dropsy which hastened her to a premature grave. She died as she lived, rejoicing in a present Saviour. We extend to Mr. Browne our sincere sympaty in his present bereavement.

The great sale of $7,542.95 worth of goods, purchased at 47½ cents on the dollar, is going on at W. J. McFarland's.

BROKEN LEG.—Mr. Malcolm Quean of Osprey, had the misfortune to get his leg broken while returning from Collingwood Exhibition. The accident occurred between Nottawa and Duntroon, and the man was conveyed to his mother's residence in Nottawasaga, where he is slowly recovering.

Take our advice and don't purchase a dollar's worth of goods without first looking through McFarland's immense stock.

THE CATTLE FAIR.—The fair last Saturday was a decided improvement on any former one. It was, however, only the third regular fair held in this place. There were some 75 head of cattle on the grounds at ten o'clock, over 40 of which changed hands at fair prices. The market last week at Toronto was exceedingly flat, owing to the supply exceeding the demand, and as a consequence buyers were careless. It is hoped there will will be a few outside buyers secured to attend the next fair.

We overheard one lady remarking to another, "you need not go into McFarland's store if you are in a hurry, as his store is always crowded with customers." Come, Mc, get some more clerks.

Mr. James Carter, Lot, 6, con. 12, Glenelg, will have an extensive credit auction sale of stock, implements, and houshold effects on Tuesday, the 24th Oct., commencing at ten o'clock. Mr. Carter has sold his farm and will sell his chattles without reserve. Having a large stock of young cattle and sheep the sale will no doubt be largely attended. Hugh McKay, Auctioneer.

Mr. Hill, tailor, is turning out first class work. Leave your order with him if you want a nobby fitting suit. Rooms over McFarland's store.

Mr. Robert Kinnier, Lot 19, con. 6, Osprey, has leased his farm and has favoured Mr. Perigoe, Co. auctioneer, with instructions to sell by public auction, on the premises, his entire stock, implements and household effects, without reserve, on the 24th of October. Sale to commence at 12 o'clock, noon. Terms, 12 months credit on approved paper for all sums over $5.

139 chests fine Japan Tea to arrive in five days, direct from place of growth, for W. J. McFarland.

DUNDALK, Oct., 1882.

MESSRS. TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

GENTLEMEN.—We received the two chests of tea in good order (116 lbs. nett at 28 cents per lb.,) and after giving it a fair trial we have much pleasure in stating that it is better than any 50c. tea that we have hitherto purchased, and we can recommend it to any person as a good flavored strong tea, and more than value for the money. We have given a number of our neighbors samples of it, and each of them express their intention of procuring a chest of it.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN & WM. ATCHESON, Farmers.

We noticed in looking over the prize list of the provincial exhibition held at Kingston that Mr. John Ford, (Mount Royal Farm,) Artemesia, was awarded the prize for East Grey for the best managed farm. The prize consisted of a bronze medal. We have since had the pleasure of seeing the medal, which has engraved thereon "Best managed farm in East Grey, John Ford, Artemesia, 1882." The above farm consists of 100 acres, and is situated 3½ miles from Markdale. The place is comparatively new, having been cleared up chiefly during the last fifteen years; every department however displays taste and good management. The fields are well laid out, the soil well tilled, and free from weeds and thistles by thorough culture and rotation of crops. The buildings are laid out with due regard to economy and convenience and their surrounding kept neat and trim. The stock show good breeding and proper care. "A place for everything and every in its proper place" is Mr. Ford's motto.

THE HEROINE.—Miss Morrison arrived in town on Thursday night last, and since that time has been stopping at the residence of Mr. C. Moore. She is rapidly regaining her health, and is daily visited by numbers of admirers. Miss Morrison is a young lady of medium size, and one can hardly realize that so comparatively slight a being could pass through the frightful ordeal she so courageously endured. At the enquiry she told her sad, pathetic story, in a modest unassuming manner, that added to the interest of as terrible a tale of human suffering and human endurance as ever was recorded. The story is well known by this time, and there is no occasion to repeat it. Last night Mrs. Palin and other ladies presented Miss Morrison with a complete set of clothing, the gift of some of our storekeepers.—Enterprise.

CANADIAN GLEANINGS.

HOME NEWS.

What is going on Throughout the Dominion—Clippings from our Exchanges—The best the Scissors can find.

Potato digging is now progressing throughout the province.

An Irishman named McHugh has just died at Quebec aged 107 years.

Bishop Cleary is now looking forward to the re-opening of Regiopolis college at Kingston.

Oliver Crosman, a section foreman on the Intercolonial Railway at Dalhousie, N. B., was found dead on the track.

Delphus Blanuette, a too confiding lumberman, just from the shanties, was robbed of $800 in the Hotel du Peuple, Montreal.

The Rev. Mr. Scrimgeour, of St. Joseph-street Presbyterian Church, was installed as Professor of Greek in Montreal Presbyterian College.

A number of Americans have associated themselves with some Quebec capitalists to start an asbestos factory in the ancient captal.

A young lad named Dumont, aged fifteen years, is to be tried for placing obstructions on the track of the Intercolonial railway at St. Arsene.

The Grand Trunk talks of building a new station at Guelph, between the G. W. R. and the present station. This is not so convenient as at present. The Mercury wants connection with the Credit Valley.

The potato crop in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island being exceeding large this season, prices are expected to be very low. From the present outlook the export trade in them does not promise profitable returns.

A young man named Milton Winger, in the employ of Messrs. Beatty & Sons, machinists, of Welland, was instantly killed by the falling of an iron pillar which he, with a number of others, was raising into position on the premises.

The Bishop of Huron has appointed Rev. Mr. Gollmer, late of England, to be assistant minister at the Chapter house in London, and Rev. Mr. Uniake of the Chapter house to be incumbent of Chesley and adjacent parts of the County of Bruce.

The Government steamer Napoleon III. has left with supplies for the lights in the Gulf, including the Bird Rocks. On her return she will take off and bring up from Anticosti such of the settlers and fishermen as are threatened with want this winter.

The Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars is in annual session at Halifax. There are sixty-three lodges in operation in the Province, with a membership of 2,100, being 700 less than a year ago. The R. W. Lodge of the World meets in June next.

It is expected that the flagship Northampton will remain at Halifax until December, when a new crew will arrive from England for her, and the present crew will go home, their term of service having expired. The new Commander-in-Chief will be Vice-Admiral Sir John Edmund Commerell.

One of the largest deposits of phosphate ever discovered in the vicinity of Ottawa has been found on lot 7, nine miles from East Templeton. The earth has been removed from the rock for over 100 feet in length and 30 inches in width, showing pure phosphate.

Superintendent Lynskey has received a telegram from Ottawa announcing that the Government telegraph line between Selkirk and Prince Arthur's Landing is now placed under the control of Manning, McDonald & Co., and men will at once remove the telegraph line from the old route to the line of railway.

Three warehouses at Prince Arthur's Landing contain about a thousand tons of freight for Winnipeg and other points west. Two hundred and fifty tons of steel rails arrived there last night for the C. P. R. Strenous efforts will be made to relieve the freight blockade that now exists at the Lake Superior terminus.

The firm of Messrs. Lee and Newport are now investigating through their solicitors some alleged irregularity charged against C. L. Hunter, an insurance broker, and son of the notary who has recently caused so much talk. It appears he took a risk for the company in the Citizens' Insurance Company, and the latter has no record of $127 premium having been paid.

The Quebecers who took part in the excursion from Montreal on the Peruvian, through the 25 foot channel, say that the steamer, with a draught of twenty-three and a half feet, undoubtedly passed freely, but it should be remembered that, owing to the abundant rains this year, the level of the St. Lawrence is over two feet higher than it has been at any time for years past.

Messrs. G. H. Hayes & Co., lumber merchants, of St. Johns, Quebec, are in trouble over a charge of forgery upon the bank of St. Johns for $6,000. Upwards of twenty-two notes given to the bank as signed by customers of the firm are denounced as forgeries. The fraud is said to have been very clear, as in some cases signatures were made for men who are unable to write. The affair has caused quite a stir in the little town.

The Ottawa City Council have authorized Mayor St. Jean to communicate with Mr. John Birkenbine, Secretary of the Charcoal Makers' Association in the United States, inviting the members of said Association to meet in Ottawa at their proposed annual assembly next year. The Council hope to secure the erection in the city of an establishment for converting the sawdust of the mills into charcoal.

Two Montrealers, named Corville and Wadsworth, who ran a roulette table at the Bell's Corners Fair the other day, were incarcerated in the county gaol on a charge of burglarizing the premises of Mr. Arnold, general merchant, at that place, and extracting from a safe about $300. On being searched by County Constable Gordon $247 were found in their possession, including two $20 bills with the corners torn off, $9.25 in shinplasters, and a florin.

An old gentleman named Thomas Weldon, visiting his son, who lives on the Wharncliffe-road, about two miles from London, was on Tuesday night accosted by a stranger near Westminster bridge, who demanded to know the time. Mr. Weldon took out his watch, when the stranger aimed a blow at him with a dagger, which Mr. Weldon successfully avoided. The old gentleman then shouted for help, and a team appearing in sight the ruffian made good his escape.

A young man named Passmore alleged that he had been relieved of $500 by one Cotterell, with whom he became acquainted while crossing the ocean about five weeks ago. Cotterell, while his companion was drinking at Kingston, did take some money from Passmore and set off for the old country. He was arrested at the depot, made to disgorge, and now lies in custody. The detective found $400 more of money in the clothing and trunk of Passmore, who is a reckless sort of fellow, and has so much money that he does not know what to do with it. He claims to be a son of Lord Rathbourne, and says his personal revenue is 500*l.* per month. There is, however, no such name as Lord Rathbourne to be found in the peerage.

His Excellency arrived at Yale B. C. a few days ago and met with a hearty reception. He visited twenty-three miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway up the Frazer river canon, and was much pleased with the work done. He ascertained on the authority of a contractor that employment can be given as follow:—One hundred and fifty carpenters at $3 50 to $4 a day; 100 hewers at $3 50 a day; 300 choppers and scorers at $2 50 a day; 100 stonecutters at $3 50 a day. Board and lodging, with three hot meals, at $3 per week. Rates, $65 from Montreal to the works. Probable time of employment three years. The Governor-General is of opinion that this should be circulated by the press.

A Peculiar Form of Grief.

A painful scene has occured at St. Gluvias, near Falmouth, arising from the difference between our laws and those of most other countries on the subject of marriage with a deceased wife's sister. A Penrhyn lady named Brodenshir was married in Switzerland, some twenty years since, to her brother-in-law, Dr. Edney, R. N., and a few days since she died at Plymouth. In accordance with her previously expressed desire, her remains were conveyed to Penrhyn for interment in the family vault at St. Gluvias. Finding, however, that the vault was full, a brick grave was prepared in the new cemetery, but the marriage being according to English laws illegal, the burial could only take place in the deceased lady's maiden name, and not that of her husband. Dr. Edney was intensely grieved at this announcement, and so distracted that he attired himself in white hat, blue tie, and brown coat, and followed the coaches on foot. The deceased was lowered into the grave without any ceremony, and the husband at once walked away, leaving the mourners behind.—Falmouth (Eng.) Letter.

A Religious Somnambulist.

In the vicinity of Wichita, Kan., there resides with his parents a young man whose Christian came is Charles, but whose surname is unfortunately not mentioned by the journal which records the following extraordinary incident in his career. One night his parents were aroused by singular noises on the roof, and, knowing their son's habits of cutting capers in his sleep, they ran out to the yard and looked up. There sat the young man upon the chimney top, clad in that garment which immemorial usage has consecrated to the purposes of slumber. Presently he arose to his feet and, addressing an imaginary audience, gave out the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," which he forthwith proceeded to sing through from beginning to end to the sonorous tune of "Coronation." He then selected a text from I. John, v. 25, preached a vigorous discourse fifteen minutes long, and slid down the lightning rod into a tub of water which his father had hurriedly placed where it would do the most good. The shock aroused him and he was escorted to his bed.

Fond of Snakes.

There is one thing about Prof. Bell, Florida agent of the Smithsonian institution, which his neighbors do not like, and that is the pleasure which he takes in the companionship of venomous snakes. A countryman called on the professor the other day, and as he entered the room a huge rattlesnake dropped off a sofa pillow which had been placed upon a chair for his accomodation, glided into a corner, coiled, and waving his head back and forth, shook his rattles viciously at the intruder. "Great jeeswax!" exclaimed the countryman. "Come in!" said the professor, cordially, handing his caller the chair just vacated by the snake; "don't mind him; he's not used to strangers, that's all." The snake obeyed an order to "hush that fuss," but still kept vigilant watch over the visitor, who, under the circumstances, did not care to make a long stay. Doubtless the reptile's fangs had been drawn, but that did not transform him into an agreeable object for contemplation.

Winnipeg.

An oil company is being formed at Gladstone with a capital of $10,000. The proposed operations will be conducted within the corporation of Gladstone, and indications are that petroleum can be secured at a depth ranging from 300 to 500 feet. Arrangements have almost been concluded with the contractor to sink three wells, if necessary, to a distance of 500 feet. at a cost of $8,000.

Mr. Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who has just returned from Montreal, states that the whole of the line north of Lake Superior will be under contract by January 1st, 1883. Surveyors are now out, and before long estimates and measurements as to rock cutting and filling will be got ready. Next week work on the western division will be completed to the Rockies.

Victor de Lesseps, son of his father, tells of the performance of his father: "But my august father was not wanting to the occasion. He had round his neck a false collar of English make. He did not hesitate for a moment. He tore it off and danced on it. This was his response to the insolence of the invader."

Women as Hotel Clerks.

A woman is, in almost all cases, a pretty formidable creature to affront, and particularly so when she is not only well dressed and tolerably young and good looking, but clad in some kind of authority. I suppose (said a correspondent of the Hartford Courant, writing from Chester, England) that may be one reason why men are unwilling to concede to women their "rights"—there would be no such thing as equality. Except those brutal persons who would not scruple to disregard all distinctions of sex in their use of physical force, the men would infallibly go to the wall. One can not haggle for a penny or maintain any small controversies with a neatly-clad, sweet-voiced, and comely women, unless she happens to be his wife. We know the dignity, yes, the almost inaccessible divinity in which many a hotel clerk of the masculine gender dwells. With what charming inattention he pretends not to notice you! With what lofty condescension he briefly replies to your trembling question! With what serene indifference he beholds your confusion of face before his dread majesty! But here in England the hotel clerk is a woman, and usually a very bright, smart, neat and comely person. She moves within the ramparts of her snug office like Arabi Bey behind his earthworks, bidding defiance to all forms and forces of invasion. She is an authority there, and looks out on you through an embrasure of her fortification with a serene haughiness which is equally exasperating and overwhelming. In vain one touches his hat and tries the arts of politeness and cajolery. He might as well perform before one of Mme. Tussaud's wax women. Few and short are the answers given. You are made to feel that you are very wearisome if you persist in trying to get a little necessary knowledge. You are snubbed unmercifully if you offer any suggestions touching your personal convenience. You are commended to the porter and to "Boots" as being quite good enough for such as you. If it were a man you might pluck up spirit to unwisely resent such treatment and "jaw back," as the rustic found it was his privilege to do in the Episcopal service, but one can not get quite to that in the case of a woman and so he retires to plume his ruffled feathers in secret, and to purchase sixpenny worth of various information from chambermaids and porters. These female hotel clerks are the avengers of their sex. And they enjoy their office. I wonder if women ever tremble and cower so before the pride and haughtiness of men? It can hardly be.

Why He Didn't Explain.

Some eight or ten years ago a silvery-tongued chap, who claimed to be a fruit tree agent, swindled the farmers of this county in a shameful manner, and one resident of Nankin was so mad about it that he came to Detroit, searched the rascal out, and gave him a pounding on the street. After he got through his work, he told the fellow that he would lick him twice as bad if he ever put eyes on him again, and it was a threat to be remembered. About three weeks ago the Nankin man was travelling in Washtenaw County, and as he journeyed along the highway he met a traveller who so closely resembled the fruit tree swindler that he halted and called out:

"Here you are again, you bold-faced rascal!" "Yes, I'm here," was the calm reply.

"Well, so'm I, and I'm going to lick you until you can't holler! I said I'd do it, and I always keep my word. Climb down here!"

The stranger "clumb" without a protest, shedding his coat as he struck the ground, and a fight began. In about two minutes he had used up the farmer and was coolly replacing his coat.

"See here," said the man from Nankin as he wiped his nose with a burdock, "you fight better than you did eight years ago."

"Well, I dunno This is my first affair with you." "Didn't I wollop you in front of the Detroit Post Office eight years ago?"

"No, sir! I was in Australia up to a year ago." "And you never saw me before?" "Never!" "And was never in Nankin?" "Never!"

"Well, I'll be hanged! Come to look at you, I can see that you are not the man! Why on earth didn't you explain or ask me to? You must have thought me mistaken."

"Oh, yes, I knew you were mistaken, but I had just discovered that I had driven seven miles on the wrong road and was wishing some one would come along and give me two words. I didn't want any explanations about it. I feel 50 per cent. better. So long to you!"—Detroit Free Press.

Turkey in Ireland.

A startling rumor, says Vanity Fair, comes from Constantinople. It is said that the grand old Turk, seized with a sudden enthusiasm for order and horrified by the tales of massacre and outrage which have reached him from Ireland has countermanded the forces destined for Egypt, and has directed them to proceed at once to Dublin Bay. The ships on their arrival will take up positions within easy range of the formidable Martello towers which guard the Irish coast, and their instructions are, on the first appearance of hostile symptoms, to lay Dublin in ashes.

Prompt measures, the Turk feels, are absolutely necessary to curb the rebellious spirit of the Irish and to restore the authority of Lord Spencer, who now finds himself unable to trust even the Prætorian guards assigned for his protection.

It is satisfactory to learn that in all this there is no unfriendly intent toward the country. So far from it, England is to be invited to send a contingent to assist in restoring order in Ireland, the only condition being that such contingent must place itself under the orders of the Pasha in command.

When Ireland has been thoroughly cowed, and Mr. Parnell executed, the future destinies of the country will be arranged by a conference of the indifferent Powers, to be held in London.

A young lady gave her fellow the mitten for some reason, whereupon he threatened to publish her letters in revenge. "Very well," said she, "I am ashamed of nothing in them but their address."

One man can deceive anuder in de matter ob friendship, but it ain't dat way wid women. Among women dar's a perfeck un'erstandin' dat da dcan put no confidence in each other.

TRAVELLING BY EXPRESS.

The Pleasures of it, the Wonders and the Financial Side.

Everybody remembers Dr. Johnson's panegyric on the charms of a rapid journey along a good road in a post-chaise. He thought life could afford nothing better, unless it were a walk down Fleet-street or unlimited tea-drinking. The speed and the certainty, in the absence of broken wheels, the smoothness of the highway and the alacrity of post-boys and Postmasters, delighted him with a sense of perfect adjustment. It would be interesting to learn what excess of encomiums he could devise to meet the due of traveling by express were he brought back for an interval to survey this world of steam. A train with a moderate completement of eight cars is appraised at £17,-000. Each of the three palace cars it commonly includes has cost £3,000 at least, and not seldom £5,000 or £6,000. Whatever can minister to comfort is provided. The smoker can smoke without annoying his neighbors. The hungry and thirsty can eat and drink. The studious can buy libraries of fiction fresh from the British manufactory, only cheapened. By day the indolent repose on splendid divans. At night the tired sleep as softly as at home. Luxuries are supplied for the eye as well as the other physical and intellectual organs. If there be a fault at all, it is some redundance of magnificence. A passenger by one of these cars might, if he were reconciled to incessant locomotion, live in in the midst of the most gorgeous upholstery, with a fair provision of conveniences to match, at a rate of expenditure which would barely suffice for the maintenance of a middle-class establishment in a country town. Although English railway travelling is not altogether so liberally arranged, the difference is chiefly of degree. For the solid equipments of a railway journey an English company is not less generous than an American. In some essential particulars the comparison may even be in favor of this country. Where there have been shortcomings they are being quickly made good. Passengers by one or two lines can obtain refreshments. On several lines there are Pullman cars. More than one company is commencing the experiment of imitating the United States fashion of conveying the luggage of passengers to their houses or hotels. An English first-class carriage as it is would appear a supernatural vision of ease to the mind of the eighteenth century. On all but a few lines which continue not to distinguish human beings from cattle, a wealthy gentleman of a hundred years ago spirited into a humble third-class department might envy the happy lot of his posterity.

The modern world is not yet at the end of its opportunities for making a common stock of its rights that it may receive a larger dividend. Towns-people in this as in other countries do not co-operate at all as harmoniously as they might in order to reap the proper gain from their necessary association. All their actual corporate advantages arise from this source, But they are entitled to more. If railway passengers were treated as municipalities treat their citizens, they would bewail their wrongs in accents beside which complaints from societies for the mutual protection of railway travelers would sound like a serenade in honor of railway Chairmen. That inhabitants of cities do not derive their rightful profit from their congregation in crowds is not the result of a reluctance in the individuals to give up their personal independence. Residents in town are naturally as docile in that respect as the majority of railway travelers The defect comes rather from the want generally of an authority willing and competent to assume the burden and the glory of the corporate trust. Were it possible to create the same relation between a corporate authority and the residents which exists between a railway board and its passengers, the phrase of the luxuries of civilization would acquire a new significance, Railway companies build branch lines which never pay to accomodate the minutest traffic. They lavish money on rolling stock with a munificence which more than justifies the doubt whether such sumptuous traveling can be remunerative. They are sparing neither of money nor of energy. It is, however, on one condition; they must have a competitor ready to do as much or more. Unfortunately, or, perhaps, fortunately, it is not practicable to dislocate a town between two rival Governments even for the sake of lapping the townspeople in the splendors of an existence made up of palace cars. Great cities must be content with an inferior scale of co-operative convenience. Still, on the most moderate computation, they do not as yet have a just return for the sacrifices they make. It is hard that, to enjoy the full benefit of acting in masses, it should be requisite to cross the ocean and pass life in travelling express from New-York to Detroit.

Sir Garnet Wolseley's Peerage.

One result of Sir Garnet Wolseley's success in the Egyptian campaign will doubtless be that he will receive the peerage which rumor has on several occasions always assigned to him. He will be the thirteenth military commander whom her Majesty will have made peers; and few of them have earned the honor by more valuable services, not only to the country, but also to the Government. In 1839 Sir John Colborne and Sir John Keane were created the first Lord Seaton and the second Lord Keane. In 1840 Sir Hussey Vivian was made Lord Vivian, and Sir Henry Hardinge and Sir Hugh Gough were raised to the peerage in 1846. Lord Fitzroy Somerset was created Lord Raglan in 1852; Sir Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde in 1858; Sir Hugh Rose, Lord Strathnairn in 1866; Sir Robert Napier, Lord Napier of Magdala in 1868; Sir William Mansfield, Lord Sandhurst in 1871; and Sir Richard Airey, Lord Airey in 1876. Of these the peerages of the Baronies of Clyde and Airey are extinct; while Lord Strathnairn and Lord Napier of Magdala are the only survivors among the grantees.

THE SORT OF TITLE HE WILL TAKE.

In the selection of titles for eminent soldiers the practice has usually been to include in them some one or more of the battles, sieges, or defences in which they have distinguished themselves. Lord Strathnairn is Lord Strathnairn of Strathnairn and Jhansi, and Lord Napier is Lord Napier of Magdala and Caryntou. The first peerages received by the Duke of Wellington were the viscounty of Wellington of Talavera and Wellington and the barony of Douro of Wellesley; and Marshal Beresford was created first Baron Beresford of Albuera and Dungarvan, and afterward Viscount Beresford of Beresford. Sir Ralph Abercromby's widow was created Baroness Abercromby of Aboukir and Tullibody; Lord Hill first Baron Hill of Almarez and Hawkestone, and secondly Viscount Hill of Hawkestone; Lord Combermere, Viscount Combermere of Bhurtpore and Combermere; Lord Gough first Baron Gough of Chinkeanfoo and of Maharajpore and the Sutlej, and, secondly Viscount Gough of Goojerat and Limerick; Lord Hardinge, Viscount Hardinge of Lahore and King's Newton; Lord Harris, Baron Harris of Seringapatam and Mysore and of Belmont; Lord Keane, Baron Keane of Ghuznee and Cappoquin, and so forth. On the other hand, Lord Clyde was made Baron Clyde of Clydesdale; Lord Raglan, Baron Raglan of Raglan; Lord Seaton, Baron Seaton of Seaton; Lord Vivian, Baron Vivian of Glynn and Truro; and Lord Airey, Baron Airey of Killingworth—all peaceful places in the United Kingdom. But in the case of Sir Garnet Wolseley, his peerage should and unquestionably will preserve the memory of some of his exploits; and the name of Lord Wolseley of Tel-el-Kebir and Coomassie with the addition of some local designation within the Queen's dominions, will, no doubt appear in the next editions of Sir Bernard Burke's and Mr. Foster's elaborate compilations.—St. James's Gazette.

The King and Queen of Italy.

The long road that leads from the Piazza del Quirinale, in Rome, is all upset, and hundreds of workingmen are laying the pipe for a larger quantity of water. The royal guest of the Quirinale Palace seems to be very glad of this change in the street, because orders have been given to raise the new level of the street to such a height as to completely hide the basement windows. Why? They seem to be afraid of dynamite. A few months ago the windows had been supplied with a sort of thick iron shutter with holes so small as to give scarcely sufficient passage to the air.

During the absence of King Humbert and Queen Margaret, several improvements have been made in the palace itself. The apartment of the King has undergone a complete alteration. Indeed, it was in need of it because when coming from the dining-room the King had no possible access to his own apartment other than through the antechamber, generally crowded with the ladies and gentlemen who were waiting for an audience. The servants would kindly direct his Majesty to go back to his rooms by the service stairs when the hall was full and when Humbert did not wish to be seen by the people in the ante-chamber. Even Kings are obliged sometimes to obey the directions of their own servants.

The King is a good sort of a fellow, not such a sportsman as his father, but a good hunter anynow, and a crack marksman. His favorite morsel is a boiled chicken or a piece of veal. The son of Victor Emanuel has bad teeth, and likes food overcooked. He is very fond of a quiet life; retires early when he can get to his own apartments, and rises early, generally before 6; takes a cup of coffee and rides for an hour and a half on horseback in the manege of his own palace; very seldom goes out for an early ride, at least now.

He receives people of every description and with great affability. A few days ago two workingmen from Leghorn came to Rome to present a crown of flowers for Victor Emanuel's grave. The King spent some time with them, and was so kind that the poor fellows were delighted. When driving his own horse through the new quarters of Rome, where many new buildings are in progress, it is noticed that King Humbert is always ready to answer the saluting workingmen who bow at him from the high scaffolding, and sometimes he is the first to call their attention by taking off his hat. Since Passanante's attempt, a mass is celebrated Sunday by the Royal Chaplain Anzino in the Quirinal. The King regularly attends this mass after the meeting of the Ministers which begins at 10 a.m. Sometimes the meeting is not over until half past 1. The priest is obliged to wait, and Mgr. Anzino some Sundays is obliged to say his mass at 2 or later. The Queen is patiently waiting and does not allow any one to have breakfast until the mass is over. It takes Mgr. Anzino about 17 minutes to go through his mass which is served by the sexton of the Piedmontese Church of the Sudario, near St. Andrea della Valle, Mgr. Anzino being at the same time rector of that church and royal chaplain. During the mass the Queen and the young Prince of Naples kneel down but the King keeps on standing all the time. Only at the elevation he bends his head slightly.

The King likes to talk Piedmontese, but the Queen never indulges in that dialect. She talks the very best Italian, and wants the young Prince to do the same. She gave him, therefore, from his early childhood a Tuscan servant from Florence. Florentines are supposed to talk the best Italian, though they may have a strong aspiration.

The Queen talks with her mother, the Duchess of Genoa, almost always in German. She can also speak very good English and perfect French.

De Martini, a skilful Neapolitan, is the physician attendant on the Queen, and always follows her everywhere, and sits at the royal table, directing her meals. He is a very temperate man, and has persuaded the King and Queen to drink water. The King never drinks wine; the Queen sometimes mixes a little Sardinian wine with water. The young Prince is also brought up in temperate habits, yet when he can get it on the sly he enjoys a good glass of claret.

Jewish Persecution.

Advices received in Vienna from Presburg report the occurrence of anti-Jewish riots at that place. The mob broke the windows of many houses occupied by Jews. The military finally restored order after making forty arrests. The military are confined to their barracks. The rioters in Presburg declare that what they have done is merely a prelude to what is coming. The shops and warehouses of Jews were forced open and plundered. The rioters offered obstinate resistence to the military. Similar excesses were committed in the neighboring town of Allumenthal, where three persons were arrested. Several hundred Jews have fled to Vienna. The Hungarian Ministry have placed Presburg under martial law.

A REMARKABLE FAST.

...range and Nearly Fatal Hallucination

...Divine Command to Fast—The Illusion Dispelled by Earnest Prayer.

Charles Fallon, a young gentleman of the ...ghest respectability, bookkeeper with Messrs. Lord & Munn, of Montreal, several weeks ago was seized with the desire to eat nothing. He explained to his mother and sister that he had a revelation from God that he must eat nothing. All the persuasion of a fond mother had no effect upon him, nor did his sister's arguments weigh with him. He would allow no nourishment to be forced upon him, and beyond moistening his lips occasionally with a sip of water nothing was permitted by him to enter his stomach. Dr. Hingston, the family physician, was called in, and endeavored to persuade the young man, but he signally failed in this. Then Dr. Howard, the expert in mental diseases, was called. He found no insane symptoms, as Fallon conversed upon every other theme rationally enough. He counselled the use of force to compel Fallon to take nourishment. To this Dr. Hingston entered the strongest protest. He believed that if left to himself the desire to eat would return to his patient, while a resort to force might kill him, as by this time he was in a very feeble state. The Rev. Canon Baldwin was a very warm personal friend of Fallon, and to him the family appealed. Unfortunately he was out town. Days passed into weeks, and Fallon grew so emaciated and feeble that his friends despaired of ever seeing him recover from the condition in which his stomach by that time must have been.

ALARMING FEARS.

It was now the fear of Dr. Hingston that the stomach would not be able to retain food sufficient to nourish him. He had by this time spent four weeks without tasting food. The Doctor objected to his patient been irritated either by religious discussions or by too pressing invitations to take food. A settled melancholy seemed to have seized Fallon, and he sat most of the time in the house. Last week Canon Baldwin returned, and had not been very long in town when he was at the side of his friend. Fallon was glad to see him, and conversed freely on all subjects, praying with the reverend gentlemen most devoutly. By this time he had been twenty-nine days in his fast. In vain Canon Baldwin pointed out that God gave men healthy bodies that they might nourish them. Fallon would reiterate his Divine command, and refused to depart from it. The case was made the subject of prayers by the Young Men's Christian Association and the prayer meeting of the Cathedral. Canon Baldwin still continued his ministrations and was by the side of Fallon at every opportunity.

THE HALLUCINATION DISPELLED.

At length, on Saturday last, Mr. Fallon very quietly turned to his mother and remarked, "I believe I will eat something." The joy of his mother may be imagined. She sent immediately for Dr. Hingston, and the latter ordered such as he believed would be the safest food for the long empty stomach. The latest news from Fallon is that he is recovering slowly. Rev. Canon Baldwin says that the steadfastness of Fallon in his belief was wonderful. He believed that severe domestic affliction weighed very heavily upon Fallon, and induced a settled melancholy that may have had the result of leading his mind into such an hallucination. He could not account for the idea of Fallon in any other way. The surprising part of the whole affair is that Fallon was able to survive for thirty-three days without having taken an ounce of solid food, and that his stomach was able to resume its functions of nourishing the nearly famished body. He had grown so thin that his clothes hung upon him, and his suit shirt looked many sizes too large for him around the neck. Altogether Mr. Fallon's fast shows how much the human body can endure of starvation without actually permitting death to destroy its vitality.

"No Cruelty in Our Place."

Is there no beating or whipping of horses, no cruel driving, no overloading, no neglect to water and feed at proper intervals, no uncomfortable and painful check-reins, no trying of animals for long periods in the hot sun, no trying of them in the storm and unsheltered for hours at a time in winter; no working of poor, old, half-starved, lame and blind animals? And for cattle—is there no starving in your town or country, no hungry-eyed animals looking over the fence at green fields beyond their reach? Do not cattle-trains pass through your locality with crowded creatures desperate from hunger and thirst and weariness? Is there no prodding with iron spikes or horrible twisting of the tail when they sink from exhaustion? Do their groans of suffering never disturb your comfortable slumber on soft couches? Are there no cruel boys in your community who stone birds, drown kittens "for sport," tie tin cans to dogs' tails and cause them to run until they are dead, or nearly so? Are there no children learning to be cruel by pulling off the legs of living insects, or impaling them on pins for the "sake of science?" If you can answer "No" to these inquiries, you certainly live in Arcadia. —Illinois Humane Journal.

Biliousness, Indigestion, Canstipation—all forms of Dyspepsia yield at once to a few doses of Zopesa, the new compound from Brazil. A 10 cent sample proves it.

A REGULAR CIRCUS.

If there is one thing in all the world that allures the average boy and delights people generally, it is a well managed and thoroughly equipped circus. The children of a city or town seem to know of its coming by a kind of intuition, and prepare accordingly. The pennies, hitherto dropped into the missionary-box with conscientious regularity, are now faithfully diverted into an old coffee-pot in the cellar corner for prospective use, and scrap-metal, old paper, etc., do substantial service in the way of securing the amount of an admission fee. But for all that, we believe fully in the properly conducted circus as a means of amusement and diversion, and are happy to state the gratifying fact that the circus—or rather its proprietors and employes—experimentally believe in ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great Pain Reliever of the age. Hon. P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth and Coup's Monster Show can be taken as typical cases. The former says: "We take great pleasure in stating that ST. JACOBS OIL is in use by many ring artists now engaged with P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth, united with the Great London Circus, Sanger's Royal British Menagerie and the International Allied Shows. From its happy effect upon those who have occasion to employ it, we have no hesitation in pronouncing ST. JACOBS OIL the best liniment which has ever been brought to our notice. It is wonderfully efficacious in subduing pain.

(Signed) BARNUM, BAILEY & HUTCHINSON."

The Press Agent of Coup's Monster Show says: "In cases of rheumatism or complaints of that kind our artists know how to cure themselves very speedily. ST. JACOBS OIL is a very popular remedy among our people for rheumatic pains, and as long as they can get it they won't suffer much."

Mr. Frank I. Frayne says: "I have suffered terribly from rheumatism in my right shoulder and arm, and at the same time I had severe pains in my chest. Sometime since I read something in a newspaper about the remarkable cures of ST. JACOBS OIL, and I thought I would try that remedy. I tell you I am mighty glad I did, for after using one or two bottles of that preparation I felt no pain whatever, and have had none since. I am firm believer in ST. JACOBS OIL, and I want everybody in my company to keep it near them."

THE NEW 32-CALIBRE WINCHESTER

The 32-Calibre Winchester, now offered for the first time, is intended to meet a large and growing demand for a repeater of small calibre. It is a modification of the Model of 1873, using the same frame, or receiver, but with a lighter barrel, and magazine of smaller diameter. It is considerably lighter than the Model of 1873, and is designed for small game at short range, and will be found the most accurate small-bore rifle in the market; especially valuable for hunting squirrels, geese, &c. The standard length of barrel is 24 inches. All the guns of this calibre will be made with rifle butt stock with solid butt plate, and without the cleaning-rod usually put in the stock. Prices and extras same as model 1873. The cartridge used with this arm is centre fire, and contains 20 grains of powder and 115 grains of lead.

Parties desiring to inspect these goods before purchasing can do so by sending us $1. We will express the gun C.O.D. If not satisfactory, you have the privilege of returning it. If the $1 more than covers express charges, we will remit you the difference; and this rule applies to all goods in our catalogue. Send 6 cents for our 96-page catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Watches, Jewellery, Silverware, &c.

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach and Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and Purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organs into action; and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every day complaints of every body, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skilful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens send certificates of cures performed, and of great benefits derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar coated, they are easy to take; and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

As a speedy cure for Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Diarhoea Cholic, Cramps, Sick Stomach, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all forms of Summer Complaints, there is no remedy more reliable than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Dealers who sell it and those who buy it are on mutual grounds in confidence of its merits.

WRECK OF THE "PICTON."—The accident to the Picton, by running ashore at Rondeau Point, which we mentioned last week, seems to have occurred, as Capt. Dunn reports, from the compass being astray. She is a total wreck, having since broken up. Most of the cargo, which was for merchants here, has been saved. Now that she is gone, it is reported that she too, was starting to run without a proper certificate—Inspector Risley refusing to commission her for Georgian Bay without submitting to another examination by a competent man, and she started off without it.—Times.

A REMARKABLE CASE

W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, suffered from a disease of the Liver and Kidneys, that brought him so low that his life was despaired of; he lay for 10 and 18 days without an operation of the bowels; after taking one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters he was enabled to leave his bed and drive out, three bottles more completed a cure, and he says that he is now a better man than he has been for years.

FIRE IN DURHAM.—About half past nine o'clock this morning the bell of Trinity church rang out a fire alarm, and on looking out we noticed that huge volumes of smoke were crossing Garafraxa Street. On proceeding in the direction indicated we discovered that a large wood shed, almost close to the residence of Mr. Alexander Robertson, in rear of the Town Hall was all ablaze, and it looked almost as if there would be a general conflagration of a large portion of the Town. Fortunately the fire was not far from the river, and a line of our townsmen was quickly formed and pails supplied from the neighbouring stores, a strong stream of water was soon being emptied on the fire on that side, and a similar line was formed on the other side to Mr. McAlister's pump, and by the combined efforts of the two lines and the energetic way in which the men worked the fire was principally confined to the shed in which it originated, although it burned very fiercely for nearly an hour. The corner of the house and a shed belonging to the McAlister House was much charred, and were often blazing up, but the fire was at last subdued. Mr. Robertson was lying sick at the time. A quantity of the furniture was removed from the house, its self was not seriously damaged. There is some insurance on the place. We did not learn the amount of the loss, but should judge it not to be over $200. It was gratifying to see the manner in which the fire was subdued by the residents of the town, thus preventing what might have been a great calamity. But it was a narrow escape. As far as we can learn we believe the fire was started by some small children at play.—Review.

It has been remarked that the quotation, "that it is better to give than to receive," applies to medicine kicks and advice, but this rule don't apply to Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Those who receive that, get a reliable and infallable remedy for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Dysentery, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels, and all Summer Complaints of Infants and Adults.

It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the state, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. EFFECTS OF DIVORCE.

There is a young lady in the city who says she has more parents and step-parents living than anyone she ever heard of. This is the way she tells the story: "You know papa and mamma could never agree, and so finally they got divorced. I don't say whose fault it was, but mamma did behave ugly at times, and even I could not get along with her. So when the separation came I went to live with papa. Shortly afterward mamma married again, and papa was not long in following suit. I did not like it very well at first, but my step-mother turned out first rate, and I got to like her splendid. Then papa seemed to get infatuated with another woman that he got acquainted with, and she wheedled round him until she made trouble, and the result was another divorce, and papa soon married the woman who made the trouble. When the second separation took place I went with my step-mother because I loved her and because my services were necessary to help to take care of the baby. Then Then what does she do but go and get married again. I declare I never saw such marrying in my life. It only happened a little while ago, and my new step-father—I suppose he is—treats me in a very kindly sort of way, as if he felt he couldn't help it, and I don't like it a bit. I can't go back to mamma, because she is mad with me for going with papa in the first instance, and I can't bear to stay where I am. It is too bad that a girl should have a father and a mother and two stepfathers and two stepmothers all living at once, and not a home that she can feel at home in."

ACCIDENT.—Mr. Dennis Talbot, an old pioneer, living near Hepworth, was thrown by a bull on Tuesday last, receiving such severe injuries that there is but little hope entertained of his recovery. Dr C. E. Barnhart was called in, and under his skillful treatment Mr. Talbot is doing as well as can be expected.—Times.

DR. WIGGINS, of the Dominion Finance Department, predicts a great storm on the ninth of March next, and gives warnings so explicit to both landsmen and marines that he will be free from responsibility for any damage done. This seer claims the fulfilment of his prediction of a recent great gale to give weight to his predictions.

KILLED BY AN EXPRESS TRAIN.—On Monday last a school girl, named Vina McCartney, aged twelve years, while crossing the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway, about a mile out of Charleston Station, was struck by the south-bound express. The train was stopped as quickly as possible, the child was taken to Charleston, and medical aid was called, but though everything was done for her, she was fatally injured, and died shortly afterwards.—Herald.

THE frequent accidents which have befallen the boats of the Great Northern Transit Company are beginning to make people afraid to travel by that line, and we are informed that when the Emerald arrived here on her last trip down, a number of passengers holding tickets for Toronto by way of Collingwood remained here to go by T. G. & B. R., rather than to go on to Collingwood by the Emrald, although by so doing they forfeited the cost of their passage from Collingwood to Toronto.—Times.

A BURNT OFFERING.—A terrible suicide was committed at Woodstock, on Sunday, the 17th inst., by Sadie E. Elstone, a much respected young lady. The victim of the rash act, who had only returned home from Grand Haven, Mich., a short time ago previous, had been troubled with dyspepsia, but did not show any signs of mental aberration. Her family were somewhat surprised that she did not go to church in the evening, it being her custom to attend regularly, but thought nothing of it. Later in the evening, Mr. Hopkins, a next-door neighbour, saw a fire among the newly gathered shocks of corn in Mr. Elstone's field. He ran over, and found the poor victim standing over the fire which she had kindled, holding her arms out, her clothing all burnt off and her hair on fire. He dragged her from the fire, extinguished the flames, and sent for a physician, and to inform the family, who were at church. The unfortunate girl was burnt from her neck to her feet. She lingered for some hours, talking incoherently, and at last uttering the words "I'm going to Jesus," expired without a struggle. In the house was found a note stating that she was tired of living in this world, and had made up her mind to sacrifice herself. She was a young girl of great aptness and intelligence, and of a sanguine, cheerful disposition, which makes her action the more astonishing.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. Impressions.

I.

Soft haze about the wood'and lurks,
  Disturbs the ox the slender prod,
  And Annabel the golden rod
From earth with coy abandon jerks.

The sumach by the meadow burns,
  No robin charms the garden nook,
  And in the forest by the brook
The squirrel skips among the ferns.

And while the Summer's weary ghost
  Across the valley floats away,
  I think of theatres and May,
Delmonico's and quail on toast.

II.

The partridge darts across the wold,
  The rabbit by the runnel dreams,
  And all the songless woodland seems
A silent symphony in gold.

Now lovers in the meadow stroll,
  Her eye's the poem he doth con;
  He thinks his name is writ upon
The lily-tablet of her soul.

The bluebirds southward swiftly fly,
  The crow above the buckwheat caws,
  And small boys yearn to stretch their jaws
Serenely round the pumpkin pie.

III.

We dream about our seaside loves—
  Those sweet, seraphic little gangs
  Of damozels with golden bangs,
Blue eyes and seven-button gloves.

We dream about the full-dress hop,
  And conversations on the beach,
  And cheeks as ruddy as a peach,
And of the sparkling ginger pop.

And how we laughed at Fortune's flaws
  That couldn't make our spirits droop,
  While we alone upon the stoop
Mint juleps drank through slender straws.

Bill Arp's Baby Talk.

The poet hath said that "a baby in the house is a well spring of pleasure." There is a bran new one here now, the first in eight years, and it has raised a powerful commotion. It's not our baby, exactly, but it is in the line of descent, and Mrs. Arp takes on over it all the same as she used to when she was regularly in the business. I thought maybe she had forgot how to nurse 'em and talk to 'em, but she is singing the same old familiar songs that have sweetened the dreams of half a score, and she blesses the little eyes and sweet little mouth and uses the same infantile language that nobody but babies understand. For she says "tum here to its dandmudder," and "bess its 'ittle heart," and talks about its sweet little footsy-tootsies and holds it up to the windows to see the waggons go by and the wheels going rouny-pouny and now my liberty is curtailed, for as I go stamping around with my heavy farm shoes she shakes her ominous finger at me just like she used to and says don't you see the baby is asleep, and so I have to tip-toe around, and ever and anon she wants a little fire, or some hot water, or some catnip, for the baby is a-crying and surely has got the colic. The doors have to be kept shut now for fear of a draft of air on the baby, and a little hole in the window-pane above as big as a dime had to be patched, and I have to hunt up a passel of kin'lings every night and put 'em where they will be han'y, and they have sent me off to another room where the baby can't hear me snore, and all things considered, the baby is running the machine, and the well spring of pleasure is the centre of space. A grandmother is a wonderful help and a great comfort at such a time as this, for what does a young mother with her first child know about colic and thrash, and hives and hiccups, and it takes a good deal of faith to dose 'em with sut tea and catnip, and lime water, and paregoric, and soothing syrup, and sometimes with all of these the child gets worse, and if it gets better I've always had a curiosity to know which remedy it was that did the work. Children born of healthy parents can stand a power of medicine and get over it, for after the cry comes the sleep, and sleep is a wonderful restorer. Rock 'em awhile in the cradle and then take 'em up and jolt 'em a little on the knee, and then turn 'em over and jolt 'em on the other side, and then give 'em some sugar in a rag, and after awhile they will go to sleep and let the poor mother rest. There is no patent on this business, no way of raising 'em all the same way, but it is trouble, trouble from the start, and nobody but a mother knows how much trouble it is. A man ought to be a mighty good man just for his mother's sake, if nothing else, for there is no toil or trouble like nursing and caring for a little child, and there is no grief so great as a mother's if all her care and anxiety are wasted on an ungrateful child.—Atlanta Constitution.

Smoking in the Presence of Ladies.

The fact should ever be kept before us that absolute cleanliness alone is compatible with health. And more, a regard for the rights of others in eschewing all filthy habits is indispensable in the conduct of true gentlemen. What shall be said of a man who will smoke in the presence of ladies, even with their unreserved consent? This is done by men who would be highly insulted if they were charged personally with doing that which was in the least ungentlemanly. We ourselves have met with men who justified smoking in the presence of ladies, with the remark that the ladies expressed a liking for the odors of tobacco smoke. We do not impeach such as tellers of falsehood, but we do say that if they really enjoy smoke, their taste is altogether abnormal and not very refined. It seems to us that their gentleman friends should recognize this fact, and at least do nothing to foster in them a depraved taste. The time will come, we hope, when all ladies will make it a rule to protest against smoking in their presence, or in rooms in which they have to dwell. It is a sign of weakness for a woman to submit to such an outrage as to have tobacco smoke befouling the air she has to breathe. To protest against wrong is the right of every one. On our women lies the duty of combating this tobacco fiend, which is sapping the health and life of our people. To court smoke, and profess to like it, is either hypocrisy, or a sign of a depraved taste which needs purifying. Let every woman refuse positively to allow smoking in her presence. She will thus do her share in ridding the world of a filthy and health-destroying habit, and show that she has at least an appreciation of cleanliness and of womanly refinement. The qualities which guide her actions who does this will win for her the admiration of all men whose appreciation is capable of soaring above that which is coarse.

There is a proverb to the effect that it is best to have the good-will even of a dog. This statement is strictly true. If you don't believe it, not over four minutes of the energetic ill-will of a good, healthy bulldog would convince you that his friendship was much more to be desired than his enimity.

John Jones lived in Cleveland. While milking he tied the cow's tail to his leg, as the flies kept that appendage flopping. After he was taken three times around the cow-pasture on his back, he remarked: "I recognize my mistake. I should have tied her tail to her own leg instead of to mine."

"My young friend," exclaimed a prosperous New Yorker as he greeted a freshly-arrived youth at Castle Garden, "welcome to free America, and let me give you a word of advice; you want to rise in the world, don't you?—become an alderman, perhaps the mayor of the city, or maybe go to congress." "Yes, sir." "Well, you go right up to The Herald office and advertise for a position as bartender."

It was at the shore and a gentleman was chatting on his cottage porch with two or three guests. His pretty daughter comes up from the beach, just out of the surf: "Oh, pappa," she exclaimed, "only think, I was nearly drowned." Pappa, turning pathetically to his friends: "By the powers, gentlemen, do you hear that? I have spent more than $5,000 on that girl's education, and to-day she was nearly drowned."

Burns and Scalds.

Five years since (Sept., '77) the American Agriculturist recommended the use of bicarbonate of soda, that is the common baking soda, for most kinds of burns. Since then frequent experiments and observations, the opinions of physicians, and the best medical journals, have more than confirmed all we then said. As burns and scalds are always liable to occur, and as this remedy, though simple, has proved to be extraordinarily useful, it should be fixed in the minds of every one. The soda, and the carbonic acid so readily set at liberty from it, have anæsthetic, antiseptic, and disinfecting properties—all highly beneficial for burns.

For slight burns cover all the injured parts with a layer of powdered soda. For deeper burns, but where the skin is not broken, dip linen rags in a solution made by dissolving about one third of an ounce of the soda in a pint of water; lay the rags on and keep them moist with the solution. For very severe burns followed by suppuration (formation of pus) apply the rags in the same way, keeping them moist; but frequently exchange them when dry for fresh ones, and carefully wash off with the soda solution any matter that has accumulated underneath, so that it may not be absorbed into and poison the blood. Leading European medical journals give numerous instances in which, by the above treatment, extensive burns of very severe character have healed speedily, leaving little scar.—American Agriculturist.

Prince Arthur Protects the Nuns at Ramleh.

The daughters of Sion have a convent and institution of their order at Ramleh. They write in a tone of deep gratitude for the protection their convent received from the Duke of Connaught when he occupied that town. His Royal Highness took up his quarters in the convent itself, and gave strict orders that the chapel and everything sacred connected with it should be respected. The good sisters, therefore, upon their return to their convent, had good reasons to be thankful to the royal Duke, and very thankful they are for his Royal Highness's protection and courtesy

How Russian Girls are Courted.

Love is the same all the world over, but "courting" is managed very differently in different countries. Russian courting, among the middle classes, is peculiar. The first Whitsunday after the young girl is acknowledg'd by her mother to be of marriageable years, she is taken to the Petersburg Summer-garden to join the "bridal promenade." This consists of the daughters of the Russian tradesmen walking in procession, followed by their parents. Up and down they go, pretending to chat with each other and to take no notice of the young men—the tradesmen's sons, dressed in their best clothes—who walk in another procession on the other side. However, every now and then some young fellow slips out of his proper rank and adds himself to the line of girls on the other side speaking to one particularly. The parents of the girl join in the conversation in a few moments, and soon they leave the promenade and are joined by the parents of the young man. Generally the old folks have talked it over before, but on this occasion every one pretends to be surprised. On the next day a female confidant calls on the girl's parents and requests her hand. This granted, all the relations on both sides meet and argue about the portion to be given with the girl. If this is not satisfactory, all is at an end; if it is what is expected, the betrothal takes place.

The bride and bridegroom kneel down upon a great fur mat, and the bride takes a ring from her finger and gives it to the bridegroom, who returns the gift by another. The bride's mother meanwhile crumbles a piece of bread over her daughter's head, and her father folds the image of his daughter's patron saint over his future son-in-law's well-brushed locks. As they arise bridesmaids sing a wedding song. The guests each bring forward a present of some sort. Wine is handed about, and some one says it is bitter and needs sweetening. Upon this the bridegroom kisses the bride—the sweetness being supposed to be provided by the kiss—salutes the company and takes his leave, on which the bridesmaids sing a song with a chorus something like this:

"Farewell, happy bridegroom,
But return to be still more happy.

Courting time has now begun. Every evening the lover comes to his lady's home with a present which, is always something good to eat—generally cakes or sugarplums. He makes love under rather awkward circumstances, for the bridesmaids sit about the betrothed pair in a circle, singing songs descriptive of their happiness.

The last evening of the courtship is enlivened by the presentation of the gifts of the bridegroom, which must include brushes, combs, soap and perfumery. On receiving these, the bridesmaids instantly carry the bride away, and wash her, dress her hair, and perfume her pocket-handkerchief.

Thus touched up, she returns to the company, and the bride's father gives his future son-in-law the marriage portion, which he takes home with him in a neat bag.

Those eternal bridesmaids, whom they must hate by this time, are there, however, still on duty, and the evening closes by the bride kneeling down and pulling off her husband's boots, to prove her intention to be an obedient and submissive wife.

Good-natured bridegrooms generally hide jewellery or money in their boots, which the bride may take possession of as a balm for her pride. After the wedding day the parents begin to give feasts, and keep it up a week, and it is not till all this is over that the "young couple" see those blessed bridesmaids take their departure. They are then compelled to kiss them, thank them, and give them each a present.

If I Had a Donkey.

An "Old Merchant" asks what is meant by "The Drawing Room Version" of the old song "If I had a donkey what wouldn't go," and how it originated. The new version first appeared in Punch for Feburary 7, 1844, and may be found in volume VI, page 85, under the heading of "A Polished Poem." It opens thus.

"If I had an animal averse to speed,
Do you think I'd chastise him? No, indeed!
But I'd give him some oats, and say, 'Proceed,
Go on Edward!'"

THE "HERDER" DISASTER.

The History of an Unfortunate Vessel—a Dangerous Headland—the Wrecked Party.

On February 24th, 1876, a fire broke out on board the "Herder" while she was lying at her pier, foot of Third street, Hoboken, to the great consternation of the passengers, who were just setting themselves down to the voyage. The United States mails were on board at the time and $65,000 in specie. After a detention of twenty-four hours the steamer left on her voyage, the fire having been extinguished after doing damage to the extent of $800.

On January 24th, 1877 the "Herder" then commanded by Captain Bradt, reached New York after a very stormy passage of sixteen days from Havre. For a time she was under sail, but the fierce winds soon made it impossible for her to carry any canvas. Two of her boats were swept away, and almost everything movable on deck was washed overboard. The stout iron davits were twisted and broken, and the skylights smashed into pieces. The crew suffered great hardships, but the passengers escaped with a few bruises, caused by their being knocked about by the rolling of the vessel. On January 20 the "Herder" passed a vessel turned bottom up, but the weather was too heavy to allow an investigation.

In June 1878, when twenty miles off the Dry George's Shoals, on her way to this port from Hamburg, and in a dense fog, the "Herder" came in collision with a large full-rigged ship. Subsequently the Captain related how near his case came being similar to that of the "Ville du Havre," which was run into by the "Loch Earn." "It was clear weather," he said, "when the "Ville du Havre" was struck, and the "Loch Earn" was seen fifteen minutes before the collision. In my case the unknown vessel, which was certainly as big as the "Loch Earn," came out of the fog a minute or so before her jibboom was scraping my rigging, and if I had not so suddenly ported my helm and sent my vessel ahead at full speed she would have ploughed clean into us, and the chances of escape for 300 passengers in the thick fog would have been much less than they were for those of the "Ville du Havre."

In April, 1880, the "Herder" was thoroughly overhauled. The boilers and machinery were put in perfect order, the second cabin was entirely refurnished and all the rooms were newly carpeted, upholstered and fitted with various conveniences. The last vessel before the "Herder" lost by the Hamburg line was the "Pomerania," wrecked off the Scilly Islands in 1876, but the greatest disaster that happened at the ill-starred spot was the wreck of the "Schiller," of the same line, commanded by Captain Thomas. There were about two hundred and fifty lives lost on that occasion, the vessel running on a sunken rock in a heavy fog and going to pieces rapidly. The gallant Thomas stood by her to the last and went down with his ship like a hero.

Cape Race is near the southeastern extremity of Newfoundland, latitude 46 deg. 4 min., north, longitude 53 deg. 4 min. It is a lofty and precipitous headland extending into the Atlantic from the southernmost point of the division of that island called Ferryland. It forms a prominent point for navigators in the North Atlantic, lying near the ordinary route of vessels between the eastern ports of the United States and England, and being the last point of American land sighted or passed in the eastward passage. It is a point very dangerous to ships sailing in foggy weather between the United States and Europe. On it is a revolving light 180 feet above the sea. It was established by the British Government, and is sustained by a tax upon all ships sailing from or to Great Britain, to or from Canada and the northeastern part of the United States.

The S. S. "Herder" has broken up, and portions of the cargo are washing ashore.

Under Fire.

A few men, very few men, go into action for the first time without thinking a great deal of the bullets and the danger, and wishing it was all over and they were safe; the second time they are under fire they remember the last time when they came out of it unhurt, and they think a great deal less of the bullets and more of the work in hand than they did on the former day. Take an instance from the late war against the Zulus, where the British had mostly young soldiers, with only a sprinkling of old ones. There "funk" reigned universal with young and old. There is no need here to tell the old tale of the nightly scares, of the stampedes, of the terror which crept over faces when a Zulu was mentioned. A lancer rides in with dispatches, and the remark flies round the ranks—"Look how he's riding; he's looking behind him; the Zulus are after him." These and a thousand other instances were but the natural outcome of ignorance—looking forward into the unknown—with men suddenly called upon to face something which existed only in their imagination, and as such was pictured in the blackest colors.

But at Ulundi, where the Zulus came round at the Little-square in thousands, with the sun shining on them, our men saw that they were only men like themselves after all, and blazed away merrily into the "brown" of them, obeying the words of command just as they used to do at Aldershott with the blank cartridges blowing in their friend's faces. Ulundi worked a vast change in their minds. Henceforth they knew that the rifles they carried were no mere toys to make a noise with, and they learned that it was a useful thing for themselves if they obeyed their officers. They had seen a group of 50 or more Zulus creep into a bush in front of them, and by a welltimed volley disappear; and they remembered it was their officer who had told them to fire that volley; without his directing work they would have potted away, and the Zulus would have potted back, for all they knew till to-morrow, or the day after. And from that time there were no more scares. So much for the apprenticeship state. Now this stage once over, and the young soldier knows as much about fighting as the old one, with all the buoyancy of youth to back him up; and so the value of the men is no longer equal.

It has been the writer's good fortune lately to have seen a good deal of real hard fighting, with men under him who had learned their apprenticeship to fire thoroughly; and what has he seen, not once, but repeatedly, in action? ...showed him the little sack which I carried under my cloak, and he was satisfied we then left the hotel silently, scarcely noticed by the servants busied about the entrance hall. Once out in the open air I seemed to breathe more freely; but my h art was too heavy for speaking, and we pursued our way in silence.

After a time we turned into an unfrequented part of the town and the lights became less brilliant and the streets more deserted. Suddenly the boy stopped and seemed uncertain as to which road he would take. He paused a moment; then turning to me said:—

"Madame, I fear I have missed my way a little; but my mother told me she would give some directions in her letter: will madame give it me that I may right myself?"

Without thinking I handed him his mother's letter; and standing beneath a neighboring lamp, he read over slowly the directions contained in the note; then, holding it still open in his hand, he resumed his walk, referring to it every now and then, as though still in doubt as to our whereabouts. There was a certain mysterious quiet about the neighborhood we were in that prayed upon my spirits—a certain silence I could not fathom, and my courage began to flag strangely as we continued our lonely road. I experienced a sensation of intense relief, therefore, when my young guide stopped suddenly before a tall dark house in a quiet street, and I listened eagerly for an answer to his gentle tap at the closed door. A voice from within asked softly in French, "How fares it, my son?" and in English the boy answered, "Safely and fairly. Open the door." The door was then unbarred and opened without the least noise just wide enough to admit us, and we entered a hall lighted by a small lamp held by a tall woman poorly clad. The flickering flame of the lamp gave forth so dim a light that I could not distinguish her features, and she spoke in a voice scarcely above a whisper. I inquired eagerly for my brother, and begged her to conduct me to him at once. She shook her head sadly, and then said:—

"Ah, Madame, your coming may do great things for him; you may be able to ease the poor mind that runs on nothing but money, money, day and night without ceasing."

She barred the door by which we had entered, and then preceded me up a broken stair case, the boy following us with the feeble oil lamp. The house sounded hollow, and our footsteps echoed drearily as we went. Presently we stopped before the door of a room which I imagine to have been at the back of the house and the woman, entering first, beckoned me to follow her.

In one corner of a large almost empty apartment, was a bed, shrouded by thick dark curtains, in the grate a low charcoal fire was burning. I made at once for the corner where the bed was, and was about to undraw the curtains which concealed from my view the poor boy I had come so mysteriously to visit. Suddenly from behind me a cloth was tied tightly over the whole of my face, a strange burning sense of suffocation overspread my senses, and I remember nothing more; all was silence, darkness, a hideous blank, until I awoke in my bedroom at the Hotel de L., with my head aching strangely and a benumbed sensation pervading my whole frame. My maid, an English doctor with whom I was slightly acquainted, and another who was a stranger to me, were anxiously watching for my return to consciousness. It was quite light and the sun was shining into the room. As one by one the events of the preceding night rose before my mind, I was utterly at a loss to imagine how I had been rescued from that horrible house and brought back to the hotel in safety.

The story was soon told. The night porter, coming on duty at one o'clock, had found me lying on the steps leading to the side door of the hotel, which opened into an unfrequented passage or street. Finding I was unconscious, he had summoned the day porter, who was waiting for him, to render assistance; and this man knowing me by sight, identified me as a lady staying at the hotel. He at once roused the house. My maid (who was waiting up for me, wondering at my prolonged absence) speedily procured the services of two medical men from the adjoining neighborhood, and they had since been using every method to restore me to consciousness, when I might perchance unfold the mystery of my strange return.

There was no trace of any violence having been used, nor any proof by which they could discover where I had been. The only thing they had found upon me, which was not my own, was a handkerchief tightly clasped in my hand, on which was embroidered my brother Richard's initials, and which I at once recognized as having been worked by me some years previously for my unhappy brother. The money had, of course, all been taken; also the rings, brooch and locket I had worn. My wedding ring was left, and the bag in which I had put the money was still hanging on my arm.

As soon as I was able I told the doctor all I could remember of the past night's experiences, and at the conclusion of the recital, they both advised me to put the matter into the hands of the police. I entreated that it might be done as privately as possible; my brother's name being so fixed up in the affair that outsiders would most probably be led to believe that he was an accomplice in the robbery, though in my own mind I felt certain that he was more sinned against than sinning.

The sergeant of police who waited on me showed great interest in my adventure, but I could plainly see that, notwithstanding all his civility, his suspicions pointed at once to my brother as chief agent in the case. I could swear to the signature being genuine. The handkerchief, too, I recognized. Alas! it really seemed only too certain that my brother had at all events been the companion of these people, and must have discussed our affairs freely with them, even if he were not more criminally concerned in the dark transaction.

The Parisian police made every effort to trace the offenders, but in vain; house after house was searched in the quarter to which I believed myself to have been taken, but no trace of the woman or child could be found. And so for a time the matter dropped.

PART II.—TRACKED.

Two years passed, and the night of my strange adventure was like a dream to me. We left France after my husband's return from abroad, and, on his quitting the army we took up our residence in London. I had meanwhile received several letters from my brother, written from the Cape, and, in answer to one I wrote him in reference to the robbery, he replied with the most solemn assertions of his entire ignorance of the transaction. I believed him. My husband was silent on the subject, and I felt thankful that the Cape was so far off. We seldom referred to the circumstances before recorded, for I could not bear to recall the horrors of that evening in the dark, desolate house.

One morning, however, I was startled by my husband crying suddenly, as he looked up from a letter he was reading:—

"I say, Madge, they think they have found a clew at last to your Parisian exploit; read that."

He passed me over an official looking letter, and I read what follows:—

"BUREAU DE POLICE, PARIS.

"TO CAPTAIN BRANSCOMBE:

"MONSIEUR—We believe we have in custody the boy who acted so prominent a part in the robbery committed on madame your wife in January 1869. He is concerned in an affair which bears a close resemblance to the one in which your lady was the victim. Will she come herself and, if she can identify him, thus help to clear up the matter which has long puzzled us all?

(Signed) C."

The thought of proceeding in this case was at first very distasteful to me; but so much might be brought to light by making the effort that I resolved, by Ralph's advice, to face the disagreeable task; and accordingly we started for Paris that night.

I will not enter into the details of the case then under examination. Suffice to say it was a robbery committed on the wife of a Colonel Styles under circumstances closely resembling those of which I was made the dupe. In this instance, however, a boy had been seized on suspicion, and it was this same boy I was called on to identify. I had not much difficulty in the matter, although he had altered in the time that had elapsed since that memorable evening, there was still those remarkable eyes, with their long drooping lashes, and the pale delicate face, to bear witness to his identity; and without the least hesitation I declared him to be the same boy that had guided me to the house where I had been robbed on the evening of January 22nd, 1869.

The boy did not seem at all disconcerted at recognition, and even smiled in a slightly supercilious manner, as though he had felt himself secure from any discovery resulting from any identification. The authorities had been unable, as yet to elicit any information from him, he baffled all their attempts at questioning him with a skill and cunning almost incredible in so young an offender. All at once I was surprised at an exclamation from my husband, who stood near me:—

"Good heavens!" he said half audibly, "I believe I see through the whole plan; what a blockhead I was not to have thought of it before! But it was neatly planned and carried out, by Jove it was!"

He crossed the hall to where Colonel Styles was sitting, and after speaking to him in a low, hurried manner, he asked leave to call a witness, who he believed might throw some light on the matter in hand. Permission having been granted, he said, in a loud voice:—

"The man calling himself Jules Fetier, body servant to Colonel Styles, and now present in this hall, is requested to stand forward."

For the first time since our entrance the boy's face fell, and he looked perplexed and rather dismayed. There was a movement in the crowd, as though some one was trying to effect a departure from the door, but the attempt being promptly frustrated, I saw them lead into the witness box the French servant who had accompanied my husband abroad, and who had left his service on his return to England. After some time passed in making inquiries, and eliciting very little from the cautious man before us, he was searched, and many letters of his present employer's were found upon him; also a pocket-book which contained memoranda, proving a great deal against himself and his two accomplices—his wife and the boy in the dock before us. No one else seemed concerned in his fraudulent transactions.

On further search the whole system of his roguery was unfolded piece by piece. He would take service with gentlemen about to travel, imposing on their credulity with false references and gaining their confidence by his well trained demeanor and intelligent conversation. Once safely out of the country he would commence his nefarious schemes, and with the aid of his clever wife and child, carry them out successfully. Nothing was ever forgotten that could lead to the desired end. No fraud was started until the details had been thoroughly mastered by his accomplices and the plan well matured. It was impossible to say how many people he had defrauded in different ways.

He had soon found out how matters stood between my husband and brother—partly from his own researches, and partly from a conversation he overheard between his master and a brother officer—and considering the situation a capital one for practising his system upon, he had at once communicated with his wife, and unfolded his plans to her, sending her the signature abstracted from one of Richard's letters to act as a decoy; and also the handkerchief which Ralph happened to take among his own, to throw suspicion on my brother as being accessory to the robbery.

Before the examination concluded the sergeant, who had been so long on the look out for the perpetrators of the deed, asked my husband how he had recognized the boy as being the son of his former servant. Ralph laughed slightly as he replied:—

"I believe I should have made the best detective of you all had I been on the spot. I thought I recalled the boy's features as being in some way familiar to me, but could not determine of whom he reminded me; however as he stooped to speak to the warder the mystery was revealed in a moment by a strange stroke of luck."

Turning to the boy who had lost all his courageous air and was looking crest-fallen and frightened, my husband bade him hold down his head. For the moment he refused, but on the order being peremptorily given he obeyed reluctantly.

From one side of the head to the other, contrasting strangely with his thick dark curls, with a streak of white hair, about half an inch wide, which shone like silver in the sunlight; then bidding the elder man remove the cap he wore, he bade him also to stoop forward, which he did with a muttered exclamation; and there again we saw the same strange white band shine out on his losely-cropped head.

No link seemed wanting to complete the chain of evidence against the offenders, and the elder was at length forced to admit the proofs were too strong for him to battle against. He begged that his wife—to whom he seemed really attached—might be treated leniently, as she was slowly but surely dying from cancer; the statement was afterward proved to be correct, and the woman was removed to a hospital, where she lingered but a short time. The father and son were fully committed for trial and duly found guilty. The sentences imposed upon them were of a severe nature, owing to the number of accusations brought against them.

I can only hope when their term of imprisonment has expired they may find people less easy to impose upon and better able to resist their machinations than was "the lady of Captain Ralph Branscomb," who fell so easy a prey to their duplicity and cunning on that memorable evening of January, 22nd, 1869.

The Spiral Stud.

We see that there is a new shirt stud invented which goes through the gimlet hole in a shirt bosom in sections, and snaps together, leaving the under side smooth, so that there is no raw selvage to stick into a man's vital parts, the way there is in the old spiral stud, and we look forward to the happy future when we can buy a set of the new studs and give the old spiral studs to the poor, who have no feelings to be lacerated. We have thought for many years that the Government ought to call in the old spiral shirt studs and issue a new kind, with coupons that will go together with a snap; but nobody has seemed to think the Government ought to take the responsibility. The man who has invented the new stud should be placed on the pension roll with the man who invented the telegraph and the India-rubber baby clothes.

For a hundred years the spiral shirt stud that screws in has held the stomach of a man in its grasp, and has made sore spots on him, when all should be sunshine and so forth. It is said that women share our joys and our sorrows. That may be so to a certain extent, and they may suffer some, but they don't know anything about the horrors of the spiral shirt stud. Many men go down to their graves, and never complain, who have had their lives made miserable by spiral shirt studs. No man can be cheerful, full of fun and frivolity, and keep a company in a roar of laughter, when he is constantly reminded that three golden cork-screws are firmly but gently entering his body from three different places; and three different shows are getting in their work under one canvas and one price of admission.

It is asking too much to expect a man to be entertaining when three artesian wells are being sunk in his person at once. Woman do not mean to be cruel, and to cause unnecessary pain to man, but if they knew how they send the quivering arrows to his very soul, in three places, they would be cereful how they throw their heads on men's shirt-bosoms, and root around to find an easy place to lay. No doubt many of our readers have noticed that men shrink from them when they lay their little darling heads on his breast, and have thought the man was shocked at their actions. It is not that. It is the spiral shirt stud. Of course a man will stand a good deal, and not complain, under such circumstances; but if the woman in the case, or on the shirt bosom, rather, will look up into his fond eyes, she will find there, beside a look of satisfaction, and don't-get-up-on-my-ac count expression, a far away, penetrating look, as though his soul was on fire, or he had been eating cucumbers.

Woman can have no idea of the sacrifice man makes in such cases, and they should not be surprised if he faints away. Other thingsin the world may cease, but the boring of the spiral stud never ceases. We have known a preacher to get a vacation for six months, with a trip abroad, because he looked sick, when all the world that ailed him was spiral shirt studs boring into him, though in this instance there was no female head acting as screw-driver to drive them in. He could preach a sermon on faith, and look sick, as the studs went into him, and the congregation would pity him, think it was his liver, and raise money enough to send him all over the world. Oh, the spiral stud has done much to demoralize the world, and it should be suppressed. —Burlington Hawkeye.

A Heroic Priest.

On the 12th of July last, at Muskeg Lake Canada, G. Chappelline, Roman Catholic priest, missionary of that place, having no food in the mission, left with an Indian family in quest of ducks and geese around the lake. The father and five of the Indians sailed in the same canoe, and two other Indians in a second. It was blowing a gale, and the priest's boat upset. The other boat came to the rescue, and succeeded in picking up the mother of the family and one of the little girls. They hastened to put these ashore, and went back to save the others, but all had disappeared. The last seen of the priest he was swimming with a young girl on his back. The bodies of the three Indians were found shortly after, but that of the unfortunate priest had not been found up to last accounts.

Individuality of Newspapers.

Every newspaper man knows there is no other such delicate and sensitive commodity as news. There is nothing else that depends so largely for value upon the source whence it emanates. There is nothing which comes before the public on which the "label" is so carefully scrutinized. Newspaper have characters as various as the individuals who conduct and control them. It is just as true now as it was in the morning of the Christian era, that "men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles.' The character of the news not only depends upon the label—the name of the journal in which it appears—but upon the character for truth and veracity of the persons who furnish it.—Trenton Gazette.

LARGE YIELD OF WHEAT.—Mr. Matthew Hadwen, of lot 16, concession 7, Culross, whose farm adjoins the village of Teeswater, writes that he has this year raised and harvested off an 18-acre field after summer fallow the large quantity of 850 bushels of fall wheat. There was about eleven hundred stooks of twelve sheaves each, which took sixty-four waggon loads to draw in and two and a half days to thresh by a ten horse power. This gives a little over 46 bushels per acre. Mr. Hadwen says, "Let Manitoba beat that if it can."

The Standard.

MARKDALE, OCT. 19TH, 1882.

OUR VILLAGE.

In looking around us we are struck with the close competition in the various lines of business represented in Markdale, and are led to believe that in no place in the county at the present time can purchasers procure as good value for their money as in this town. However, we think there is room for others. There is a first-class opening for a tannery, a stave factory, and a woollen mill, any of which, if properly managed, would no doubt prove a profitable investment to the proprietor, and a valuable addition to our already flourishing business centre.

There is any quantity of soft elm timber a short distance from the village which is of little use for anything, and for which there would be a ready market at good prices if we had a stave factory. There is an almost unlimited demand for staves, which is likely to continue.

The advantages the place offers are equally encouraging for a tannery or wool factory.

We hope our business men will be alive to the importance of encouraging and, if necessary, of assisting to establish manufacturing industries in our town. The property owners have also a special interest in the development of the place; we mean those who hold property suitable for sites for such, and we believe it would be to their personal advantage to offer a site for the establishment of such at a nominal figure, thereby encouraging public enterprise, which would create a demand for further purchases of village lots. We will refer to this matter again.

OBITUARY.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE.

It becomes our duty this week to chronicle the death of one of the oldest settlers of our Township, Mr. Mark Armstrong, who departed this life on Saturday, the 14th inst., aged 78 years and 6 months.

Mr. Armstrong was born in Monaghan county, Ireland, on the 4th April, 1804, and married Elizabeth, Daughter of Mr. John Strain, of the same place, in October, 1828. In 1846 he and his wife emigrated to this country and settled in the Township of Markham where he remained four years, and again removed to the County of Grey, selecting the present sight of Markdale as their future location. There was very few settlers in the Township at the time consequently they had to endure the hardships and privatios of a pioneer life.

He has always taken a lively interest in any enterprise that had for its object the advancement of the interests of the village which derived its name (Markdale) from him. He has been a liberal and cheerful supporter of the Methodist Church, of which he was a zealous member for upwards of 50 years, and held the office of a local preacher for nearly the same period, was one of the trustees of the church and parsonage in Markdale, the site of which, comprising over an acre, he generously donated.

The funeral was very largely attended and an appropriate sermon was preached in the Methodist Church by Rev. N. A. McDiarmid, after which the corpse was conveyed to the cemetery where the last rites were performed. We extend to his sorrowing widow our condolence and trust that she may be Divinely sustained in this painful bereavement.

OSPREY FALL SHOW.

The agricultural society of the above township held their fall exhibition in Maxwell on Tuesday, the 10th inst. The day was cool and dry, and there was a good turn out. The exhibit of horses was good, there being a marked improvement in this class. Some good specimens of grade cattle were on the grounds, but we are led to ask ourselves, as well as others, the reason why there are so few cattle exhibited compared with the number of horses at the different local exhibitions, and the general answer we get is this, "the cattle are hard to drive and take too much trouble looking after them, and we do not think it worth the trouble for all we get for it." This is, we think, quite reasonable. There is comparatively little trouble in driving a horse five or ten miles, but when it comes to driving young cattle it is not quite so handy.

There was quite a display of carriages and ploughs exhibited.

In the inside department there was a very good display of articles. The display was not as large as last year, but the quality of the articles were very creditable.

It is very evident that a society that has not proper grounds where all can be shown in one enclosure is working at a disadvantage. We are indebted to the Secretary, Mr. Josiah Gamey, for the

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store.

THE "TIN KING" TALKS.

From Maine to Manitoba,—from St. Johns to British Columbia, Mr. Thos. W. McDonald, the Tin King of the Dominion, whose large works extend from 153 to 157 Queen Street, Toronto and cover a solid block; is recognized and respected. Mr. McDonald's experience with the Great German Remedy is thus announced by him: It is very gratifying to me to be able to give a written testimonial respecting the unequalled merits of the world renowned remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, as an alleviator of pain. I was for years sorely troubled with a swollen leg. In vain I tried all the prescriptions of medical men. At last in deep despair I resolved to test the virtues of St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy, and to my great joy before one bottle had been exhausted I found myself completely cured. Trusting that St. Jacobs Oil may meet with the success it deserves, I close this statement, by reiterating my indorsement of its efficacy.

Among the names spoken of as likely to be called to the Senate to fill the vacancies now existing, we hear that of George Jackson, Esq., mentioned.

A telegram was received by Mrs. Dodds on Monday last, bearing the sad news of the death of her second eldest son, John, who went to Winnipeg last spring. He died on the 15th Oct. from congestion of the lungs.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

W. E. Gifford. Pastor M. E. Church, Bothwell, was for two years a sufferer with Dyspepsia in its worst form, until as he states "life became an actual burden." Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he tells us in a recent letter that he considers it the best family medicine now before the country for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint.

On Monday evening last the Hon. Alex. McKenzie was waited upon at his residence in Toronto by a deputation from his own constituency of Lambton and presented with a complimentary address and a purse containing a cheque for the handsome sum of $5,500.

Oh, yes, a $5 bill is $5 these days, or at least Trimble & Wright think so, for in exchange for one they give you a good tweed suit of clothes, a pair of braces, a linen collar and necktie, a jack-knife, and various other articles of house furniture too numerous too mention.

Wm. Lucas & Co, bankers, Markdale have $200,000 0 to loan on real estate. Straight loan system. No fines. Low interest. Moderate charges.

It is not at all out of place for some persons to advertise well all they know, nor does it require a great deal of money to pay the printer's bill, but every man, woman and child who has visited Trimble & Wright's know that they are selling goods at and below wholesale prices, and that there is no place under the sun where goods can be got as cheap.

Sport is sport, but destroying property is not sport. There are a few boys in our village who make a practice and seem to take a delight in training and practicing their destructive propensities in such ways as throwing stones through the windows of vacant houses, and sometimes even inhabited dwellings. A few of those youths are known and will be made an example of should they continue their practice.

THE SHORTHAND BOOM.—The business of Shorthand has now a recognized place in Canada. The demand for Shorthand amanuenses is great, and greatly increasing. The interests of this young profession have been materially forwarded by Bengough's Cosmopolitan Shorthand Writer, the September No. of which has reached us. It contains a very interesting report of the Shorthand Convention held recently in Toronto, and quotes the expression of various newspapers, all in favor of the movement. The Constitution of the newly-formed Canadian Shorthand Society is given in full. The subscription price of this Magazine is $1. Bengough's Shorthand Bureau, 11 King Street West, Toronto.

A REMARKABLE CASE

W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, suffered from a disease of the Liver and Kidneys, that brought him so low that his life was despaired of; he lay for 10 and 13 days without an operation of the bowels; after taking one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters he was enabled to leave his bed and drive out, three bottles more completed a cure, and he says that he is now a better man than he has been for years.

Trimble & Wright have purchased this week 140 chests (8,120 lbs. net) of that far-famed 30 cent Tea. They sell it at 28 cents in 5 lb. lots, and if you do not find it as recommended they refund your money and charge you nothing for the trial. Don't be deceived, there is no equal for it this side of Japan at the price.

A special meeting of the Loyal Markdale lodge of the C. O. O. F. will be held in their Hall on Friday, the 20th, at 8 o'clock p. m. Those who have signified their intention of joining are requested to attend.

Mr. J. R. Trimble has purchased a lot in Markdale and is prepairing to build thereon a large stable.

Mr. Ford's mill works like a charm since the improved machinery has been added thereto, and a very superior quality of flour is now produced.

A large arrival of candies, sugar toys and nuts at Montgomery's Bakery.

NEW BLACKSMITH SHOP.—By reference to another column it will be seen that Mr. H. White has commenced business at Flesherton Station. His skill as a workman is unrivaled, and needs no praise of ours.

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

THE ART OF COURTSHIP.

A St. Louis reporter has been prosecuting an investigation as to what young women and widows of that city consider most desirable or convincing in the matter of proposals. One living in the vicinity of Grand avenue, whose offers equal her years in number, attributed her triumphs to a careful cultivation of the premonitory symptoms in her admirers. "I do not commit myself," she explains "but I lawfully put them in the notion of saying tender nothings, which you know are the stepping-stones to proposals. For instance, a timid admirer is made to understand, by word or look, according to the progress he has made in my good graces, that I am glad to see him. If another caller should follow I do not arouse No 1's suspicions by treating him in the same way, but give No 2 my hand, and of course he feels what I intend him to—that No 1 is a nuisance. It is rare that I have to manage three at once who have been developed into an acute condition that would be spoiled by lack of tact on my part. If a third comes in later I am studiously indifferent until by a low aside I can gently find fault with him for not calling oftener or sooner. Whenever I observe that a proposal is impending I ward it off until I get into my favorite chair—that blue satin one with the very low back which you see setting by the window. High-backed or side-arm chairs are often fatal to declarations of the tender passion, and attitude is an important matter. I manage to have a book or sketch of some sort in my hand. This brings him very close to me to see what I am pointing out. His left arm then has no alternative but to get out of the way, you understand, and if he has skill my right hand will be appropriated before he declares himself, so I can't pretend any longer to doubt that he is in earnest. Then, of course, there is nothing f r me to do but to become as graciously cool as I can under the circumstances. The only disagreeable thing for me is that, having aroused his emotion, I feel such an interest in seeing a satisfactory conclusion that the brief second I enjoy the climax is far too short for my reward, and I dislike rapid transitions of feeling. Once while occupying a crimson rocking-chair I was surprised by a gentleman whom I had thought but slightly interested in me dropping on his knees in a frenzied declaration. I think that lovers are unconsciously influenced by colors, and that a woman should affect subdued or brilliant shades as he may be respectively impetuous or cautious, so as to preserve a harmonious balance."

A Chesnut street debutante says she doesn't like to be courted by sepulchres—old beaux with growing bald spots and ill-assorted teeth; they are always ready to criticize women for repairing deficiencies of figure or complexion, yet actually they do more making-up in the end, and then expect the girls to be devoted to them. She likes live young men whose circulation is good and who are earnest lovers. So far she has not received an offer of marriage, but thinks she would enjoy that most where the lover in a romance comes up behind her, as she stands in a conservatory or bay-window, and takes her in his arms as he whispers the words she has been longing to hear. Then she would hide her face on his shoulder and experience the heroine's all-overish feeling that, one of the old girls insists, gives a woman a weak back and isn't a good thing to practice.

The Laclede contains a pretty little widow, who declares that a man of sense rarely uses the word "adore" in courtship. Those who do so generally adore no one but themselves. She recently received a written proposal from a strange gentleman whom she had noticed several times in the elevator, and she explains: "I didn't like it, and refused to have an introduction afterward. If he would only stop to think about it he might understand how I feel. I don't believe in marriage without genuine regard on both sides, and if he had but managed to make my acquaintance discreetly by degrees, working up into that tumultuously delightful period of awakening interest which we call love, I might have given another answer. My first husband won me by sending a box of confections in which was hid a diamond ring with our initials cut inside an engraved lk on the reverse side of the shaft. When he came that night I wore it on the proper finger, and, though no words were exchanged on the subject, we grew into the habit of discussing our wedding day, so that the end seemed perfectly natural, I like modesty in a man. The more he looks and the less he says in courtship the surer he may be of winning, and you know there's no time like a slow promenade in the moonlight to encourage sentiment."

One of the society girls, whose engagement has been announced, denies that the man said to be interested has ever proposed. Indeed, she doesn't know anything about it. "The pleasure of getting a love-letter," she adds, "is only excelled, I fancy, by the act of answering it. But that hasn't been the way I have been approached by admirers. They seem to think that personal attentions are more impressive and safer. One of my friends received a written proposal, and the postscript said that if she refused his offer to please return him the letter. He had even inclosed two three-cent stamps, which made her so angry that she not only sent back the letter but the stamps, too. About three months afterward one of the other girls in our set had a copy of that letter from him and brought it to show us. Of course she refused. He is one of those self-conscious creatures whose highest aim, next to getting a wife with money, is to cultivate a mustache and goatee."

HOW A WOMAN KEEPS ACCOUNTS.

It is a touching sight, to see a woman begin to put down every cent she sp nds, so as to find out how to economize, and where all the money goes. Procuring a small book, she makes a due entry, and on the Monday after the first Saturday in which her husband brings home his pay, she carefully tears the margin off a newspaper and, with a blunt pencil, strikes a trial balance something in this way:

"John brought me home $48 40, and $1 43 I had is $49 93, and $1 00 I lent Mrs. Dixon is $50 93— but hold on, I ought not to enter that, because when she returns it, it'll go down. That was $49 93, and what have I done with that?"

Then she puts down the figures, leaving out the items to save time—a process which enables her to leave out most of the items to where a round sum is involved, on the supposition that they have already been put down. As thus:

"Six dollars and fourteen cents for meat, and 10 cents for celery, and 10 cents for the street-cars, and a bad 5-cent piece I got in exchange, and $2 81 cents I paid the milkman—who owes me 19 cents—that's $3, and 15 cents at church, and the groceries—they were either $15 60 or $16 50, and I don't remember which they were, but I guess it must have been $15 60, for the grocer said that if I would give him a dime he would give me half a dollar, which would make even change, and I couldn't, because the smallest I had was a quarter—and $2 75 for mending Katie's shoes, which is the last money that shoemaker ever gets from me, and 10 cents for celery—no, I put that down."

Finally, she sums up her trial-balance sheet, and finds that it foots up to $64 28, which is about $15 more than she had originally. She goes over the list several times and checks it carefully, but all the items are correct, and she is just about in despair when her good angel hints that there may be a possible mistake in the addition. Acting upon the suggestion, she foots up the column and finds that the total is $44 28, and that according to the principles of the arithmetic she ought to have $5 65. Then she counts her cash several times, the result varying from $1 40 to $1 97, but then she happily discovers that she has been mistaking a $2 gold piece for a cent, and remembers that she gave the baby a trade dollar to cut its gums with. On the whole, she has come within 86 cents of a balance, and that, she says, is close enough, and she enters in one line of the account book: "Dr.—by household expenses," so much; and is very happy until she remembers, just before going to bed, that she has omitted $2 75 for her husband's hat.

CRIT-CHAT.

This is the latest for wedding invitations: "Come round and see me capture a mother-in-law at 8 o'clock, sharp."

They were at a dinner party, and he remarked that he supposed she was fond of ethnology. She said she was, but she was not very well, and the doctor had told her not to eat anything for dessert but oranges.

"Yes," said the gilded youth, "Fred snubbed and cut Jack in a frightful way. Of course it was a rude and uncivil thing to do, but then there were extenuating circumstances. Jack had been making love to Fred's wife."

"Do you like candy, ma?" asked a little Austin boy of his mother. "No, my son; it makes me deadly sick." "I am so glad to hear it. You are the kind of a woman I can trust to hold my candy for me until I am done playing."

"Have you no love for the beautiful, then?" queried she in winsome tones. "N-n-o, but I think I should have if I only dared." "Have courage young man." "Oh, I wasn't thinking of you at all, I——" But she hustled out of the room, hating herself for having sprung the trap too soon.

A society journal says it is only one young man in a dozen who can leave a house in a graceful manner. This is doubtless owing to the reckless habit eleven fathers in a dozen have of swinging their feet when the young men are leaving. The society journal should endeavor to bring about a reform in this matter.

We never have had the experience, but we should think it would roll an editor fearfully after he had worked the most of the day getting up an editorial declaiming that a man is better off for being married, to go home and be jawed all the evening because he forgot to bring two dozen clothes-pins or some such thing.

A contemporary asks: "How shall women carry their purses to frustrate the thieves?" Why, carry them empty. Nothing frustrates a thief more than to snatch a woman's purse after following her half a mile, and then finds that it contains nothing but a receipt for spiced peaches and a faded photograph of her grandmother.

A Paris husband, plagued by his wife to buy her a new bonnet, strolled into a sales-room and, by way of a joke, purchased a bonnet of a very old date. He took it home to his wife and she drew from its crown a piece of paper which proved to be a bond for 500 francs. There is a strong argument in favor of husbands buying their wives old style bonnets.

"Don't swear so, John. What if you should be struck dead with such horrid oaths on your lips!" said his wife soothingly. "Swear so? Jimminy crickets, by all that great, I'm not swearing, but I'm going to express my opinion of this confounded, nine-cornered bazoo of a blamed rickety infernal bit of stove-pipe——" Exit the wife with her hands over her ears.

Some genius has invented a little article called "fire-kindler." Unless it is made in the shape of a coal-oil can, the newly-imported girl will not touch it. If it contains something that will explode and knock the domestic end over end two or three chairs, and burn off her eyebrows without doing any other damage, there may be a large demand for the "fire-kindler."

During a Deadwood quarrel the other night a woman was seen to rush between the combatants, and throwing herself before one of them exclaimed to the other: "Don't shoot, oh, please don't shoot him." Greatly affected, the foe lowered his revolver and asked in tremulous tones. "Are you his sweetheart, wife or sister?" "No," answered the peacemaker, "but this man has a room at my house and owes me three weeks' board."

A Reminiscence of Eugenie.

Mme. Amelie Ernst, the French elocutionist, has recently been publishing in the Voltaire a series of her reminiscences of the celebrated personages whom she has met. As the wife of the great violinist Ernst, as well as on account of her own talents, she has always mingled with that brilliant society which is composed of the literary personages and artists of France. Here is a glimpse of one of the noted figures of her day: "I received an invitation to a soiree given by Mme. de Girardin. She was living at that time in the palais Marbœuf on the Champs Elysees, a building which has since been destroyed. At the soiree I met Mme. de Montijo and her daughter. The future empress and her mother had come from the Spanish embassy, where a fete had been given in honor of the Queen's birthday. Mme. Montijo was dressed in white, with a red scarf. Her daughter had on a superb toilet of white lace, ornamented with tufts of wild grasses attached to the corsage and the skirt with clusters of diamonds. Notwithstanding her great beauty and her splendid dress, there was less attention paid to her than to her mother in that serious society. As both Mlle. de Montijo and myself were relegated to one end of the room, we commenced a conversation in Spanish. I spoke then the language of Cervantes very well, and my companion amused herself by making me repeat after her sundry coarse carters' expletives which she thought were totally unpronounceable by a foreigner. I did not succeed, to my credit be it said. She talked to me then about her taste for the drama, and about the comedy she had played in at an entertainment given by the Queen of Spain, and so from one thing to another we came to talk about Louis Napoleon, th n president of the republic. She called him ugly and ridiculous, and as that very morning he had riddon out in the Bois de Boulogne with a comforter around his throat, that comforter greatly amused the lively and charming girl, who laughed mischievously at him from whom she was so soon to receive the crown matrimonial of France.

Jenny Lind in Love.

"I am a Quaker, as you know," a Philadelphian [illegible] writer in the Century, "and it is reported that, shortly before Jenny Lind's visit to the city, an aged lady arose in one of our meetings and said she had heard that 'Jane Lyon, a very wicked woman, was on her way to this country to sing,' and she hoped that none of the young people would be drawn away to hear her. Nevertheless, an uncle took me and my brother to the Saturday Matinee. We had seats in the balcony and so near the stage that we could in a way see behind the scenes. Early in the entertainment Jenny Lind sang 'Home, Sweet Home,' and the audience was beside itself. Among the members of her company was her future husband, Otto Goldschmidt. He was to the audience simply an unknown pianist, and to be obliged to listen to anything but the voice of Jenny Lind was provoking. Well, the man played, and from where we sat we could see Jenny Lind behind the certain listening most intently. When he had finished, the audience seemed in nowise disposed to applaud; but Jenny Lind began to clap her hands vigorously, observing which we boys reinforced her; and, observing her face light up—I can see the love-light on it yet—we clapped furiously until the applause spread throughout the audience. When he had finished playing a second time, my brother and I set the ball in motion, and the applause was great enough to satisfy even the fiancee of Otto Goldschmidt."

Prince de Wagram's Estate.

Bertha Rothschild, who renounced Judaism to marry the Prince Alexander de Wagram, bringing to him an income of $150,000 a year, is spending her honeymoon at his chateau in a suburb of Paris. This is a grand place, called Gros Bois though not so pleasantly situated as when Napoleon gave it to Marshal Berthier. It had belonged to a noble family that had emigrated, and it had become national property. The first emperor was liberal in giving such estates to his military followers, who, in accepting them, bound themselves over to join in no conspiracy which had for its object the bringing back of the Bourbons and the old aristocracy. The Prince de Wagram succeeded in having the grounds cut across by two railroads, in order to replenish his treasury by obtaining excessive damages, which he did through official connivance. The money enabled him to secure brilliant matches for two of his daughters. The third married Prince Joachim Murat as the emperor was declining, and has since been obliged to ask her father for that income with which it was expected the emperor would keep his cousin Joachim supplied.

A Kind-Hearted Princess.

Seldom is it that "stories" about the princess of Wales are circulated, but a recent issue of the Whitehall Review recalls one, of an accident that occurred a few years ago, which is worth repeating, as giving an insight into the practical kindliness of her truly royal heart. An Austrian general, visiting at Sandringham, while saying "good night" to his royal host, chanced to stumble and sprained his ancle so that for several days he was confined to his bed. Not only did the prince call frequently to inquire after his condition, but the princess also came every day and read aloud to him at his bed-side to divert his mind from the pain he was suffering. "I know of none of my own family except my mother who would have done the same for me," the general always adds, with a grateful tremor in his voice, when he relates the story.

A Helpmeet.

There are, no doubt, cases where a man earns a great fortune, while his wife's existance is that of a butterfly, writes Col. T. W. Higginson. These cases are rare; taking one family with another, the wife works as hard as her husband, and the fact that his share involves the handling of the money does not make it his money. It belongs to both, and what he pays over to her is not a gift, but a matter of right. "This was a present to me from wife," said a rich man, showing an ornament. "Bought with your money," said a friend jocosely. "No!" he said, "out of her own hard earnings. She keeps house for a man of your acquaintance!"

OUR INLAND WATERS.

Three Years' Wrecks, Burnings, and Loss of Life.—Nearly 500 Human Lives Lost.

Stringent Measures for Public Protection Imperative.—Unsafe Condition of Steamers.

Though the consideration of the danger resulting from the overcrowding of steamboats has been forced upon the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for a number of years, and means have been suggested to prevent such a state of affairs, no rule has yet seemed sufficiently elastic to suit the conflicting interests of owners on the one hand and the travelling public on the other, or to reconcile such interests to the various conditions of navigation. An approximate rule, based on the length and breadth of the vessel, has been recommended, but as no two vessels of like dimensions in this respect would have the same stability under a load of passengers, it has not been adopted. Several steamboat owners in this port claim a safe capacity of 1,500 passengers, but have not life-saving appliances for the fourth of that number. In fixing a limit to the number of passengers to be carried on any boat, it is but reasonable to suppose that the public should demand life-saving means for each person within that limit. One thing especially should be prohibited, that of overcrowding the upper and promenade decks, as the danger is sufficiently great in the generally unsatisfactory condition of the vessels without enhancing it by overcrowding or overloading. A noticeable defect in the construction of nearly all the lake steamers is that the engine-room is not sufficiently connected by combinings or substantial bulkheads. As at present constructed the combinings are very shallow and the sheeting of inch pine, instead of being made of heavy pine or oak, or better still, of iron, so as to be able to stand the force of the sea after the gangways are washed in by the storm. Such a defect as that remarked caused the collapse and foundering of the steamer Asia, with its accompanying loss of life. There is also great danger of the vessels taking fire from the proximity of the wooden combings to the boiler, the distance between the two being only 18 inches. The firing is all done from the front end of the boiler in the majority of lake boats, the back head being never visited except when requiring cleaning, and as sparks frequently are emitted from this part, the danger of communicating with the inflammable pine combing, eighteen inches distant is imminent. The City of Winnipeg and Manitoba took fire from this defect in construction, and at a less recent period the City of London and Mary Robertson, all trading to Georgian Bay ports.

MARINE DISASTERS.

A brief mention of the more serious disasters to Canadian vessels during the past three years, within the limits of the West Ontario Division, extending from Whitby to the head of Lake Superior, will be appropriate under present circumstances, and will convey to the public an accurate idea of the appalling loss of life which has during that period distinguished travel on our waters.

LOSSES FOR 1882.

The following are the losses so far during the present year on the waters within the limits mentioned:—The steamer Manitoulin, of the Great Northern Transit Line, took fire when about four miles from Manitowaning on the 18th May. The vessel became a total loss, and twenty-five persons, passengers and crew, lost their lives. The vessel was valued at $35,000, and was only running on her third season. On the 10th June the steamer Vanderbilt was discovered to be on fire when opposite Meldrum Bay, Manitoulin Island. The vessel was beached, and became a total loss, but the passengers and crew were saved.

A vessel supposed to have been the schooner Nellie Sherwood foundered on Georgian Bay on the 20th September, all on board being lost.

The steamer Picton ran ashore and was wrecked on the night of the 20th September. The crew were all saved.

The shocking disaster of the steamer Asia, with the loss of all on board with the exception of two, is too recent an occurrence to require any detailed mention. However it may be proper so state that the loss of life resulting from her wreck could not be much under 120.

DISASTERS IN 1881.

The fearful disaster at London on the 24th of May, 1881, by the upsetting of the pleasure steamer Victoria, and the loss of 181 lives was the result of overcrowding the boat beyond her capacity to bear up under such a load. With 200 persons equally distributed on the main and upper decks the vessel would be safe, with 400 she would be dangerous, and with 600, the number stated to be on the vessel, the majority of those being on the upper deck, the wonder is that she did not upset immediately on leaving the wharf. From the shape of the hull, a flat-bottomed scow, if loaded down under the wharf's edge, there would be little tendency to right if the guard got below the water, which it did soon after leaving the wharf.

The propeller Columbia, of the Collingwood and Chicago line, foundered off Port Frankfort, Lake Michigan, on the 10th September. The cause of this disaster was not reported. Two boats, one with eight and the other with nine persons, got away from the vessel as she was going down, and of those seven were saved, the others being drowned on the surf. It was not ascertained how many were actually lost in this disastrous affair.

The propeller City of Winnipeg was burned at Duluth on the 19th of July. The engineer reported that the fire started in the wood pocket at the port side of the boiler, at 3.30 a. m. He at once gave the alarm and the fire pump was turned on, but the fire having too much headway all efforts to quench the flames were unavailing, and in a short time the steamer was burned to the edge of the water, four persons who were unable to escape perishing in the flames.

The propeller Jane Miller was lost on Georgian Bay on the 25th of November, with passengers and crew, the entire number being supposed to be about twenty-five or thirty persons. The details concerning the loss of the vessel were exceedingly meagre, as she seems to have gone down with all hands.

The steamer Lake Erie was sunk by collision with the steamer Northern Queen in Lake Michigan, opposite Poverty Island, on the 24th of Nov. during a fog and snow-storm. The Northern Queen struck the Lake Erie stem on abreast the smoke-stack. The shock broke the steam-pipe near the chest, the escaping steam scalding Wm. Forbes a deck hand, so severely that he died seven hours after the accident. The Lake Erie sank two hours after the collision in deep water fifteen miles from shore. All the hands and passengers on the Lake Erie were taken on board the Northern Queen, but while the latter was making the entrance to Manisque harbour she struck the pier and became a wreck.

Whilst the tug Prince Alfred was on her way from Goderich to Sarnia in July a plug in one of the boiler tubes flew out, causing the death by scalding of a fireman, the son of the engineer, Benjamin Filtean.

The loss of the steamer Waubuno on Georgian Bay in 1879, with the consequent loss of life is still fresh in the minds of the public, and the more recent loss of the propellers Zealand and Simcoe in November, 1880, the former with all hands lost and the latter with a loss of twelve out of a crew of seventeen.

LOSS OF LIFE FOR THREE YEARS.

During the past three years the loss of life on Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron, and Superior or through accidents to steamboats and other vessels has amounted to 470 persons, a greater number than those lost during the entire twenty years preceding. Twenty years ago there were but 46 steamers in Canada, Upper and Lower, and the number is now 800. Of course any comparison of the loss of life during recent years with those preceding, without taking into consideration this great item of increase in the number of vessels would be apt to mislead; still the loss of life yearly for the past three years is disproportionate to the rate of increase, large as it is.

OTHER NOTES.

The following is the number of vessels lost or broken up during last year:—West Ontario, Huron, and Superior District, 11 vessels, 2 paddle and 9 screw; East Ontario, 5 vessels, all of them screw; Montreal, 2, 1 paddle and 1 screw; Quebec, 3 vessels, 1 paddle and 2 screw; Maritime Provinces, 4 vessels, 3 paddle and 1 screw; Manitoba, 2 vessels, both being paddle; British Columbia, 4 vessels, 2 paddle and 2 screw.

A second officer who has sailed the lakes for fifteen years, generally on schooners, stated to a Globe reporter last evening that he left his vessel recently owing to her unsound condition. She has been inspected by a Government Inspector who has hesitated about granting her a certificate, being well aware of the rotten condition of her timbers, but his hesitancy disappeared as the captain and part owner transferred something from his pocket to that of the Inspector, who made out the certificate without further demur. The whole transaction was witnessed by the mate, who as soon as he secured his wages left the vessel. The timber was in some parts so decayed that it was friable to the touch and would not hold a nail. Such defects were, however, covered by putty and paint so as not to be visible. —Toronto Globe.

Prayer.

Every prayer is a wish, but wishes are not prayers. In the heart of every prayer is the sense of need, but a sense of need is not prayer. Prayer is asking for a felt need; not asking the universe, but God. No one can intelligently ask who does not believe he can and may be heard. No one can perseveringly ask, who thinks that asking will bring nothing. Persons who believe that the whole influence of prayer is simply the effect of their own thoughts upon themselves, never pray. They cannot pray. The mouth may utter right words; the heart is not in them. Some prayers are not prayers for those who say them do not really wish for the things they mention. But the difficulty with some prayers is that there is no grasp of the idea of God—that is no asking, "Ask that ye shall receive."—Christian Advocate.

A Heartless Joke.

A young lady, who is very heavy insured by strangers in the matrimonial insurance companies, says a southern paper, on the report of her approaching marriage, went with a friend into a dry-goods store last week. She knew that the clerk who was waiting on her had invested a year's savings in a policy on her coming marriage. While examining a piece of silk she said to her friend, in an aside perfectly audible to the clerk: "Since my engagement is definitely broken off I will have no trousseau to buy. I think I might afford this." When she turned to ask the clerk the price, he had fainted.

For the foundation walls of the new English church in Rome, the corner-stone of which was laid in April last, the entire materials of the old convent have been required and many loads of mortar and brick in addition. From the chaplain's recent report of the financial state of the church it appears that a sum of 17,000*l* has been raised; that the ground, with legal expenses, has cost 6,000*l*; that the removal of former buildings, the foundations and lawsuits have cost another 6,000*l*, and that there remains in hand 5,000*l*, the latter a sum that the outer walls, which according to the contract are to be finished by January next, will exhaust. The work must then cease unless further funds be provided. Besides the 5,000*l* now in hand, there is required, says the report, for the pillars of the clear-story, windows, roof, floor, heating apparatus, and fittings, a further sum of 5,000*l* at least. "We should bear in mind," said the chaplain, "that the room outside Porta del Popolo, which we at present use for divine service, and for which we pay a rent of 100*l* a year, is held on an uncertain tenure. Unless the new church be soon completed the congregation may find themselves without a building in which to meet for public worship."

FRANCE AND MADAGASCAR.—The National says the Cabinet will discuss Debrazza's treaty with the Congo River chiefs during the week, and its ratification is assured. The National understands if the Queen of Madagascar does not formerly recognize the rights of France in the Island, energetic measures will be taken with a view to their preservation.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night sweats and cough, prompt measures of relief should be taken. Consumption is a scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofulous or blood-purifier and strength-restorer, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections it has no equal. Sold by druggists. For Dr. Pierce's treatise on consumption send two stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Successful experiments were carried out a few days since at Aberdeen harbor entrance with the oil apparatus invented by Mr. Shields. It is the intention of the Local Harbor Commissioners to continue the experiments during the winter, more especially during dangerous storms. They expect that the oil system will minimize the danger to vessels entering the port.

Vegetine.—When the blood becomes lifeless and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate, want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause, the Vegetine will renew the blood, carry off the putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

Seeking Oil.—An oil company has been formed at Gladstone with a capital of $10,000 or $15,000. The proposed operations will be conducted within the Corporation of Gladstone, and the indications are that petroleum can be secured at a depth ranging from 300 to 500 feet. Arrangements have also been concluded with a contractor to sink three wells, if necessary, at a distance of 500 feet at a cost of $8,000.

Rheumatism. This painful disease that so often cripples for life, arises from poison circulating in the blood, and often from an excess of acid. Inflammation is developed in the muscles, ligaments and joints, by colds, damp clothing, &c. Liniments are servicable to releve, among many, Hagyard's Yellow Oil is preferable. To eradicate the rheumatic poison from the system, nothing can surpass Burdock Blood Bitters. 5.

The International Getreide Zeitung, published in connection with the International Seed Fair lately held at Leipzig, points out that enormous fields of cereals in every stage of cultivation have been left untouched in Russia because of the partial exclusion of the Jews from the cereal trade, consequent on the persecutions. A Word of Caution.

Beware of Opiates and powerful astringent drugs in the treatment of Bowel Complaints, they may lull the pain and check Diarrhœa, etc., but are liable to produce inflammation, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is guaranteed safe and reliable, even for Infants, and is a specifice for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic, Acute or Chronic Diarrhœa and Summer Complaints generally.

Robert A. It is stated that $5,000,000 will barely cover the damage which the Italian Government must make good in the imundated districts in the form of roads, bridges, public buildings, without touching the question of aid to the sufferers.

Electric (not Eclectric) Oil.—The two words have very different significations, as will be seen by reference to Webster. The Eclectric Oil has no claim to Electric properties only by the picture on the wrapper, which looks like begging the question. The popularity of Briggs' Electric Oil is such as to induce unprincipled persons to appropriate all the law will allow them to do. The proprietors of the original Electric Oil have no claim to the words "Eclectric" or "Thomas," but to the words "Briggs' Electric" they do lay claim, by right, as they have made them of value to themselves. The sales of Electric Oil are increasing daily.

Pleurisy, Liver Complaint.

Yarmouth, N. S., June 14, 1880.

H. R. Stevens, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—Last summer I was troubled with Pleurisy and Liver Complaint, was unable to work for seven weeks. I had the advice of two able physicians and took their medicine without getting any relief. One day your agent happened to pass my door and handed me a circular, which I read, and at once concluded to try your Vegetine. In three days I was like a different man and was able to resume my work in a short time. Have since enjoyed the best of health. I have recommended Vegetine to several of my neighbours and know it to have accomplished wonderful cures.

Yours truly, P. A. VANHORN,
Foreman of A. F. Stoneman & Co.'s wharf.

P.S.—I consider I owe a great deal to Vegetine. I sincerely believe if it had not been for it, I would have been laid up for months and perhaps years. P. A. VANHORN.

WHAT IS CATARRH?

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxœmea, from retention of the effeted matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back part of the mouth causing ulceration of the throat; up the eustachian tubes, causing deafness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness, usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

To effect a cure the parasite must be removed or destroyed; hence inhalants and snuffs are worthless.

Some time since a well known physician of 40 years standing, after much experimenting, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease whether standing for one year or forty years. KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster,

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone if properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins' cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts. and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on recept of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.

Sold by all Druggists.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as Carcharodon Rondeletii. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say :

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

Mr. John Bowers, of this village, met with rather a painful accident on Saturday last. In turning a waggon, in which there was a number of barrels, he fell out. Before he could get cut of harm's way one of the barrels followed and struck him cutting his wrist, besides dislocating the largest bone of the forearm.

PRICEVILLE.

(From our own correspondent.)

The weather has been very fine lately, everybody seems to be busily employed, our town gossip not excepted.

The potato crop in general is light in this vicinity but will likely keep well, having been gathered in such nice dry weather.

Some of the competitors for prizes at the late agricultural exhibition are loudly protesting that some prizes were gotten fraudulently. It would appear from the result of some of our exhibitions this season that the term "pair of geese" meant that neither of the pair required to be a gander. It is evident that the judges were not geese.

A buyer has been around here for some time purchasing horses for a street car company. Mr. Alex. McLean, south line, sold a mare for $150.

A great many cattle were sold at our monthly fair on the 16th inst. Mr. Robb took a very large drove out of town.

MEAFORD ROAD.

(From our own correspondent.)

Mr. William Gilbert has taken unto himself a wife in the person of Miss Cooper, of Euphrasia.

Another new firm of threshers have started business here—Messrs. Bow, Ross & Co.

Personal.—Messrs. John Boland and Daniel Walker returned from the Great Lone Land last week looking hale and hearty, thus showing that the climate of that country agreed well with them.

DUNDALK ITEMS.

Buildings in course of erection are being pushed on as rapidly as possible while the fine weather lasts.

A lodge of C. O. O. F., was organized on Tuesday evening.

The remainder of the show day "drunks" were fined on Monday last, save one who decamped.

On Monday night a sudden death occurred in Proton. A daughter of Mr. Fernane, who had been ill for some time was seized with violent pains in her head. Before medical aid could be obtained she was dead.

OSPREY NOTES.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. John Osborn has sold his farm, 10th line, Osprey, and is moving to Flesherton where he intends living retired.

Potatoes are a failure in many parts of this township.

Mr. W. H. Gay intends going to Muskoka this week.

Mr. W. L. B. Hamlin left on his wedding tour Wednesday afternoon, the 25th.

Read Trimble & Wright's advertisement. They say they cannot be undersold in the county. Give them a call.

ESPECIALLY FOR THE LADIES

How Women in the East Dress—The Austrian Empress—A Word to Women.

A Paradise for Women—How to be Happy—Gigglea.

A Word to Women.

I know that if women wish to escape the stigma of husband-seeking they must act and look like marble or clay, cold and expressionless, bloodless; for every appearance of feeling, of joy, sorrow, friendliness, antipathy, admiration, disgust, are alike construed by the world into an attempt to hook a husband. Never mind! Well-meaning women have their own consciences to comfort them after all. Do not, therefore, be too much afraid to show yourself as you are, affectionate and good hearted; do not too harshly repress sentiments and feelings excellent in themselves, because you fear that some puppy may fancy that you are letting them come out to fascinate him; do not condemn yourself to live only by halves because if you showed too much animation some pragmatical thing in breeches might take it into his pate to imagine that you designed to devote your life to his inanity.

An Athletic Empress.

The Empress of Austria, who has for several years followed the hounds in Ireland and England, will hunt this year in the neighborhood of her favorite estate, Godollo, in Hungary. The love of the Empress for horses and dogs amounts to a veritable passion, and she maintains at Godollo an amphitheatre in which she rivals the ring of performances of her favorite proteges, the Parisian ecuyeres, and of the stars which Herr Rentz, the continental circus man, brings out in his magnificent productions of the horse opera. As a young girl, the Empress was devoted to field sports, but her ambition to excel as a horsewoman is said by the gossips of Vienna to date from the day when she discovered that Herr Rentz' sprightly daughter Katherina, better known as "Kaetchen" in canvass-covered circles, was a sub-rosa friend of his Imperial Majesty Franz Joseph and drew a handsome pension from the Emperor's private exchequer. Elizabeth determined to outdo her professional rival in the refinements of the equestrian art. The task was no easy one, for Kate Rentz years ago, before she reached the adipose period of German womanhood, could clear a seven-foot bar on her English hunter even in the narrow limits of the sawdust ring. But the Empress had the nerve to try anything that any other woman had done in the saddle, and she commanded, of course, the best horseflesh in the world, and she is to day acknowledged the best "gentleman rider" of her sex.

The Empress Elizabeth is the youngest woman of her years in Europe. With the honors of a grandmother, she has reached the time when the national tendency to make flesh assert itself, and as a matter of comfort to herself and her horses she regularly trains for the hunting season. She has been passing the later summer at her chateau at Ischl, and her regimen there was suggestive of the professional athlete. Up at 6; two hours of hard work in free gymnastics or fencing; a cold shower and a plain breakfast, followed by three hours in the saddle or on foot. The reduction in weight not showing itself to the desired degree, the ardent huntress actually took to the professional last resort of sweating and a continuous run for two hours a day. On going to Godollo she had a pack of slow beagles sent down, and proposes to follow them on foot after the Hungarian hares, which are, however, neither so swift nor so long-winded as their British relatives. With the coming of the first frosts the Imperial Diana will get out her horses and hounds with the full determination of beating the record, and as the deer and foxes on her estates have been carefully preserved for some years she will probably succeed.

How Women Dress in the East.

Every few minutes (writes a contributor to the Gentleman's Magazine) you meet a group of Carene ladies closely veiled, with the white muslin or black silk y shmak and a group of attendants. They ride astride their donkeys decked with tassels and all manner of gay trappings, and as they pass every man with a proper sense of decorum averts his face, lest his eyes should rest on so much vailed loveliness. Even the working drudges who are often elaborately tattooed, are equally strict in keeping the face virtuously covered, though the rest of their drapery may be caught up or blown about in such style as scarcely suits our notions of decency. The same thing continually strikes one among the Hindoo women, who would be eternally digraced by the faintest approach to our ordinary evening toilet, but who have no manner of objection to displaying a wide "lucid inteaval" between the arm and the waist, and any amount of unstockined ankle! I remember a Hindoo gentleman remarking that on his first visit to a London drawing-room he wished he could have hidden himself anywhere, he felt so shocked at the company in which he found himself. (A somewhat similar comment was made by a young harvest lad at a harvest-home, which was always attended by the laird's daughters. On one occasion a friend accompanied them, very much decollete; and, as he sat at the end of the room among the evergreens, the lad gazed in open-mouthed admiration till the lady rose, and when he saw that "It wasna' a waxen image, but a real leddy," he fairly left the room in horror!) There are several other contrasts in the dress habits of the eastern and western world. One is the respect involved in piling extra yards on the turban as the acme of veneration—more especially on holy days—in opposition to the custom of taking off the hat. I suppose it must be some such lingering tradition of Oriental fashion which makes the Jews wear their hats in the synagogue even in western lands. And so, whereas our poor folk in Scotland, even smart lassies with fine bonnets, will rarely put on their shoes and stockings till they are near the kirk, or "big hoose," no Hindoo or Mohammedan of the highest rank would enter your drawing-room or any temple or mosque with his slippers on—the dust of the outer world must not pollute any dwelling worthy of honor. At the same time you constantly see both Arabs and Hindoos carrying their shoes in their hands when marching on flat ground, both in order to save them and facilitate their own progress. They are all good walkers, and it has been observed that such civilized annoyances as afford employment to the chiropodist fraternity are utterly unknown to their shapely, hard-soled feet. Imagine how curious it would be to see Englishmen swearing eternal friendship over an exchange of hats, but with these men an exchange of turbans (especially if they should be the green turbans of Islam) is the most sacred taken of inviolable friendship.

A Place Where Woman is Supreme.

An original sect is reported to exist in Finland, the fundamental principle of which is the sovereign authority of women in the family. The disciples of the sect, whether married or living in concubinage, take an oath to submit themselves entirely to their wife or mistress, and to confess to her once a week. On their side the women choose one of their number as sovereign, whose duty it is to see that the men remain faithful to their oath, and to punish them if they transgress. There are some villages entirely devoted to this new religion. The only analogy to this sect is to be found in Siberia, where the Purifiers recognize equally the authority of women.

Two Ways of Being Happy.

There two ways of being happy. We may either diminish our wants or augment our means. The result is the same, and it is for each man to decide for himself, and to do that which may happen to be the easier.

CHIT-CHAT.

When a pretty Irish girl is stolen away they suspect some boycotter.

Queen Victoria says she is proud of her soldiers. The ladies always did love the military.

It will be fashionable to gather autumn leaves this month. It will be equally as fashionable to throw them away the next.

Hindoo girls are taught to think of marriage as soon as they can talk. American girls are not. They don't require teaching.

"You're as sweet as a peach," he said, patting her softly on the cheek. "Yes," she murmured, snuggling still nearer to him, "I'm a clingstone."

An Indiana woman bought some poison for rats, wrote the word "poison" on it four times, hid it on the top shelf in the pantry, and yet the hired girl used it for baking powder within a week.

A Georgia man who had been married seven times, says he has had awful hard luck. He'd scarcely get a wife before she'd die and he'd have to go to the expense of courting and marrying another. The thing got to be ruinous.

Spinks went home the other night afflicted with double vision. He sat for some time with his sleepy gaze riveted upon Mrs. S., and then complacently remarked, "Well, I declare, 'f you two gals don't look 'nough like to be twins."

She admitted to her mother that the young man had made a very strong impression on her, "Yes," remarked the old lady, "I can see where the impression mashed the lace flat as a clean napkin. Don't let it happen again."

What a providential thing it is that, as a general rule, by the time the eldest girl gets old enough to have a beau the youngest child is old enough to sleep quietly. A cross baby yelling up-stairs would be a fearful dampener on courtship.

The young girls who enter the English postal service get $2.50 per week at first. If they are real good girls, after a few years they get 50 cents or $1 more. Many of them remain single, because the salary is not large enough to support a husband.

Slang is a dangerous language. Recently, when a handsome young wife went to a hardware store to get one of those wooden contrivances to mash potatoes, and said, "I want a masher," every man in the shop, from the boss to the office-boy, started to wait on her.

A lady who had company to tea reproved her little son several times, speaking, however, very gently. At last out of patience with him, she said, sharply: "Jimmy, if you don't keep still I'll send you away from the table." Looking at her in surprise, he asked: "Didn't you forget to use your company voice then, mother?"

Scene in Court—"Now, Mr. Blank, you say that on that day, at noon, you saw a woman ride past your house at furious pace, and you have given us a detailed description of her costume. Please tell us what was the color of the horse." "I do not remember." "Well, was the woman white or black?" "I did not notice; she went so fast that I only had time to see how she was dressed."

A southern paper says the alligator destroys millions of mosquitoes by letting them settle on his jaws and then swallowing them. Ladies who are annoyed by the pests might rid themselves of the nuisance by keeping an alligator in the bedroom during the night, but there are some women who would prefer the mosquitoes. They would as soon have a mouse loose in their chamber as an alligator.

At a wedding, not long since, among the presents displayed was a $1,000 bank note from the father of the bride. After the wedding was over the old gentleman folded up the note and put it back into his vest pocket. The conduct of that doting father reminds one very much of the promises of reform made by the candidates previous to the election as contrasted with their performances when the election is over.

An ancient maiden lady in passing the Continental hotel was very suddenly stopped and tenderly embraced by a young gentleman who called her Mrs. Blank. It was soon explained that the young gentleman had mistaken her for a relative, and the spinster passed on satisfied. While telling the incident a friend exclaimed sympathizingly: "Dear me, how embarrassing." "Not at all," was the unexpected reply. "I found it very refreshing."

A distinguished physician says that the garments worn by women are preferable to those worn by men. He may speak from experience, but we don't believe that he ever wore a walking costume of royal blue cloth, with facings, revers, and pelerine or velvet [illegible] with velvet basque, a long, clinging pelisse trimmed with lace [illegible] front [illegible] backs, Charles [illegible] collar, and [illegible] black velvet poke and [illegible] dressing corset cut entrain, and [illegible] for [illegible] Hardly [illegible]

Nervous Exhaustion.

The natural cure for disease from overwork is rest, but here a great mistake is sometimes made. When a person is tired out or exhausted by too much physical labor of any kind, we do not say, "You have worked your muscles too exclusively; you should have given more of your vital energy to mental work, and to restore the equilibrium you must immediately take up some mental work. Rest yourself from a hard day's labor at hay-making, or washing, by an hour's work at mathematics." The very tired man or woman does not care even to read, but inclines to seek entire rest, perfect laziness, "balmy sleep," until the strength recuperates. It is quite as unreasonable to urge physical exercise upon a person whose brain is really tired with labor. Let a little rest intervene. The general health is best maintained by a proper intermingling of physical and mental exercise, but perfect health requires some hours of perfect rest in every twenty-four, and some time for simple recreation, or what children call play.

Sometimes what we call "laziness" ought to be allowed. A child or (a man) who grows fat and lazy from over-feeding, should be put upon a plainer diet and urged to exercise. But those who grow languid and have little appetite from nervous exhaustion, ought to be carefully nourished by nutritious food, of easy digestion (since the digestive organs are probably in a weak condition), and allowed to rest and gather up strength before being called upon to expend it. No stimulants will afford any real help. They call out the strength temporarily and make one feel strong while the influence lasts, but this is only wasting the strength. One may live for a time upon stimulants, and appear to be helped by them, but only genuine nourishment really builds up the strength. Food alone, however good, cannot cure nervous exhaustion. Pure air, sunlight (all of this that one can get and endure), cleanliness, warm, easy clothing, and restful surroundings, are all essential, and these natural agencies alone will effect a cure in almost every case if taken in time, while the case is curable. The food taken should be real nourishment, not simply the pretty little invalid's dishes, made up of delicate starches and flavorings, that one often sees recommended by ignorance. Starch has nothing for the brain and nerves, and for this reason white bread is very poor food. Flour should be used that contains all of the gluten of the wheat. The "entire wheat flour" is recommended by physicians as the best. Oat-meal, good milk, eggs, beef, and the best fruits and vegetables, all help to build up strength. Pure air night and day are needed, and the time should be spent out of doors as much as possible.

For those who are only beginning to suffer from nervous exhaustion, light gardening and other employment may be useful. Those who are much worn with brain labor, had better not try anything at first more laborious than riding, as walking wearies an already tired brain. There is no more healthful and enjoyable exercise than light horseback riding; it brings many muscles into play, diverting the mind, and gives tone to both mind and body. "Diet and Quiet" are among the best of our physicians.

A Deadly Duel.

A fatal duel between two Bonapartist journalists was fought last month on the grounds attached to a villa in the vicinity of Paris belonging to one of the proprietors of the Pays. The principals were M. de Massas, a writer on the Combat, and Henri Dichard of the staff of the Petit Caporal. The cause of the duel was a controversy concerning the restoration of the empire, in which resort was had to such bitter personalities that, on referring the situation to a "tribunal of honor," in which Paul de Cassagnac figured as one of the judges, it was decided that a resort to the fighting code was indispensable. The weapons selected were swords, and the actual fighting did not last a minute. In that time Dichard received severe thrusts in the scalp, shoulder, and hand, and it seemed clear that he must yield very shortly, when an incautious movement by De Massas, who was pressing the fight vigorously, enabled Dichard to give his antagonist a deadly thrust in the breast. De Massas had fought bravely in the Franco-Prussian war, and was an experienced swordsman. It was while wounded and being nursed in a French country house that he first met the maiden whom he afterward married. He lived very happily with her, and she was waiting in an inn near the scene of the duel in an agony of suspense for news of its outcome. She came too late to find her husband alive. The fatal result of this contest has made a painful impression in Paris, and may exert a good influence in suppressing the practice. The parties to the duel has been summoned to court.

The Plague in Sitka.

Collector Morris, at Sitka, in a letter to the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, Washington, expresses the hope that a member of that service may be stationed at Sitka. He states that for three months there has been raging there, confined chiefly to the Russian creole population and Indians, a disease resembling black measles, combined with the scarlet fever, making a plague-stricken community. Those taken nearly all died, and the Russians have been almost decimated. Mr. Morris says Captain Pearson, of the "Wachusett," turned a deaf ear to their piteous appeals for help, and took the ship and medical officers away to Wrangel Island, leaving a lieutenant of marines and guard without medicines. Mr. Morris says his course has been a disgrace to the American navy.

"Uncle John," said little Emily, "do you know that a baby that was fed on the elephant's milk gained twenty pounds in one week?" "Nonsense? Impossible!" exclaimed Uncle John, and then he asked, "Whose baby was it?" "It was the elephant's," said little Emily.

MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

RAINLESS HARVEST.—The Minnedosa Star says that the rain which fell on Wednesday last was the first shower since July the 26th.

FUR SHIPMENTS.—Last week the Hudson's Bay Company shipped from Winnipeg to London 107 bales of furs, valued at $150,000.

HEAVY FINE.—Joseph Gourure, of Keewatin, was fined $200 dollars and costs for selling liquor on Wednesday of last week.

COAL FOR WINNIPEG.—Two thousand tons of hard coal arrived at Prince Arthur's Landing in one day for Winnipeg dealers. Five thousand more are in transit.

LIGHTING BRANDON.—Sixteen street lamps are to be placed at once at impartant corners in Brandon. The lamps are the same as are used in Chicago.

LARGE LUMBER DEPOT.—The Winnipeg Times says that including all classes of building material, 203,800,000 feet of lumber is handled annually in the city. This lumber is sold at prices varying from $30 to $70 per thousand feet, according to quality.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.—The C. P. R. South-western between Winnipeg and Morris is rapidly approaching completion.

PAYING THEMSELVES.—A farmer named Tait recently purchased a farm on the Red River near Ki nan and a few days ago he got the assistance of some Indians to dig his potatoes. He did not give them all the money they wanted, upon which they ransacked his house and carried off a large quantity of potatoes.

GAME PLENTIFUL.—It is a noticeable fact that the prairie chickens and other game are much more plentiful since the country has become settled than several years ago, when the first settlers arrived. The explanation is that foxes, hawks, &c., are more destructive of game than sportsmen, and the settlers by destroying the "varmint" have incidently protected the game.—Mountaineer.

RICH MINING REGION.—Prof. Bell, in a report just published, says that round James' Bay, and up the eastern shore of Hudson's Bay deposits of coal and iron lie closely packed together in seams and veins of surpassing richness. Vast tracts of forest also exist there with deposits of silver, copper and molybdenum. The region, in fact, so Prof. Bell thinks, will be the future Pennsylvania af the North American continent.

PRIZE ESSAY.—The Board of Agriculture has decided to offer prizes of $50 and $25 respectively, or medals of equal value, at the option of the successful competitors, for the best and second best essays of the capabilities of Manitoba for stock-raising. The stock to be treated of are horses, cattle, sheep and pigs, and any other animals which competitors may think worth conridering from an agricultural standpoint.

EGYPTIAN BONDHOLDERS.

The Only Beneficiaries of the War.

Vanity Fair receives the following communication from "A Fortunate Speculator," who says: "Although your paper has almost alone been independent enough to criticize Mr. Gladstone's Egyptian policy, now so popular both with the jingo, and the imitation jingo parties, I think even you must admit that this policy, damaging though it has been to the liberal party in this country, and utterly ruinous though it has been to the national party in Egypt, yet has been a perfect god-send to one large and deserving class in this country and France—namely, the poor Egyptian bondholder. I will relate my own experience as a bondholder within the last three months. I have no doubt but that it is a fair sample of what others have done; and your readers will not be surprised to hear that I entertain the highest feelings of gratitude for Mr. Gladstone's spirited Egyptian policy. On the first outbreak of the Arabi rebellion I sold my Egyptian bonds at 70, never thinking it possible that a Gladstone and Bright government would force upon any nation a ruler and a form of government to which they were unanimously opposed. However, in a few weeks I changed my opinion. Alexandria was bombarded, Bright resigned, the guards were put under orders for Egypt, our one general buckled on his sword and I bought back my bonds at 46—with some trepidation, I confess. However, events marched quickly. The Indian troops were brought over again, by Lord Beaconsfield's worthy successor, the much-abused Cyprus was utilized as a base, the Suez canal was seized in defiance of all international agreements, the unfortunate Egyptians were mown down by shrapnel shells from Woolwich and the sabres of the Life Guards, Tel-el-Kebir was fought, Cairo was entered by our army amid the curses of its population, and my Egyptian bonds went up to 70 again, the price at which I sold originally. I have now sold again, and shall reinvest my capital in something safer than unified bonds; but by Gladstone's policy I made 24 per cent. by the fall, and 24 per cent by the rise, and I now have in cash at my bankers' £1,180 to represent every £700 I had invested in Egyptian bonds. Can you be surprised at my gratitude to Beaconsfield's worthy successor in Eastern policy—William Gladstone? Something should be done to hand down to posterity a mark of the bondholders' gratitude, and I propose that a statue of the Grand Old Man should be erected at the entrance of the stock exchange. To this I will gladly subscribe, as I am sure would many Egyptian bondholders."

At a Social Club to which Jerrold belonged a certain song was cited as an exquisite composition. "That song," exclaimed the enthusiastic member, "always carries me away when I hear it." Looking eagerly round the table. "Can anybody whistle it?" asked the earnest trifler.

'PHILIP CHEVILSTONE.''

Victoria laughed during the reading of the stie.

"Well, papa," she said, "you have often hed you had a son; now you will have a rd."

"A pretty thing," grumbled the Colonel, o be plagued in my old age by some over- wn, overspoilt brat."

"Brat, papa? Why, surely Mr. Chevil- ne cannot have young sons!"

"How do I know that?" retorted the Col- el. "Many a man makes a fool of himself his old age."

"But surely, papa, if Mr. Chevilstone was e of your old companions-in-arms, he st be about your own age; and it is not ely—"

"No, it is not likely," snapped the lonel. "But a good many things hap- n that are not likely, Vic. The letter esn't say a word about the fellow's age or ything."

"It is certainly vague," assented Vic- ia.

"Vague! It's a perfect riddle! what are e to do here with a great growing lad who'll t like a horse and make love to all the ser- nt maids?"

"Oh, papa, it will not be so bad as that! oung Mr. Chevilstone may be an accom- ished young man, or"—here she laughed— a very little boy."

The Colonel smiled grimly.

"I'll write to say I won't have him!" he claimed. "Why am I to be turned into guardian to an Indian hobbledehoy against y will!"

"But you can't write, papa dear, there no time. Remember, Mr. Chevilstone ys his son will be here almost as soon as his letter which has announced his ar- val."

"That's true!" muttered the Colonel, uite nonplussed.

"So you see you must submit with a ood grace, papa. And now," she con- nued, rising, "since you have finished reakfast, I will leave you to read your paper nd go and make preparations for this young Indian, who may be expected any our."

"Very well, dear"—and the Colonel groan- d inwardly as he took up his Times—"since here's no help for it."

The Colonel commenced to read his newspaper, while his daughter, hasten- ed to hold a conference with the house- keeper.

At 8 o'clock on the same evening, while Colonel Kemp was lingering over a cup of coffee and Victoria singing to him a series of Scotch ballads, in which the old soldier de- lighted, "Mr. Sydney Chevilstone" was an- nounced. The Colonel rose hastily from his seat, with an air of doubt and curiosity. Victoria, following her father's example stopped short in the middle of "Auld Robin Gray," and rose involuntarily. But, as their guest, with pleasant smile, and extended hand advanced toward the master of the house, it required all the good-breeding and self-possession of the veteran and his daughter to prevent their uttering an exclamation of extreme surprise.

The new-comer was neither an over-grown "hobbledehoy" nor a "very little boy," as surmised by father and daughter. He was a tall, handsome and particularly dignified man of about eight-and-twenty; Sydney Chevil- stone, in fact, was so striking in appearance that he would have attracted attention any- where.

The visitor was—as was to be expected from his never having resided out of India —exceedingly dark—so dark, indeed, that his complexion would have been almost dis- agreeable to the eye of a European but for the great intelligence in his dark eyes and the dazzling whiteness of his teeth, which set off the dusky hue of his complexion to advantage. His jet-black hair [illegible] silky and curly, and a small, well- trimmed mustache shaded his upper lip.

"A guardian to that stately animal! Pooh!" muttered the Colonel to him- self. But he bade him welcome with all the self-possession he could at the mo- ment muster, and introduced him to his daughter.

Victoria, who had been prepared to see a boy of certainly not more than [illegible] for once entirely lost her presence of mind and colored deeply as she returned young Chev- ilstone's graceful bow. She felt that she was positively awkward, that her demeanor was more than of a village girl than of a well-bred young lady. She was angry with herself accordingly and the consciousness of her gaucherie did not assist her to appear less gauche. Sydney Chevilstone came to her relief.

"You were singing, Miss Kemp. Pray do not let me disturb you."

"But," put in the Colonel, "have you dined, Mr. Chevilstone?"

"Oh, yes—before I left town!"

"But your traps."

"Oh, your butler is seeing to him. They are being taken to my room!"

"His room!" thought the Colonel. "Con- found his impudence!" He said aloud. "At least you will let us offer you a cup of cof- fee?"—and he rang the bell and ordered a fresh supply of cake.

"With much pleasure," said the visitor, "on condition that I do not disturb Miss Kemp."

"Oh, my daughter was only singing to me a Scotch ballad! I have a foolish partiality for Scotch airs."

"Ah! so I heard! Miss Kemp was sing- ing 'Auld Robin Gray,' I think. I caught the air as I came up the stairs;" and he looked with interest at the young lady.

"Go on then, Vic, since Mr. Chevilstone permits it," said the Colonel.

Victoria hesitated. It seemed, at so early a stage of acquaintance, very like being "trotted out for inspection." But she felt to be occupied anyhow was preferable to sitting unemployed under the searching gaze of the new comer's large, dark eyes; and with some nervousness—a thing very unusual with Victoria—she resumed her seat at the piano and recommenced the touching and beautiful ballad. Was it won- derful that, interpreted by such an exquis- ite contralto voice as that of Victoria Kemp, the sad story should go straight to Sydney Chevilstone's heart? Never had the young man in his Anglo-Indian experi- ence had the opportunity of listening to so pure and beautiful a voice. So it was not surprising that Sdyney Chevilstone was quite taken by storm; and when, at the conclus- ion of her ballad, Victoria ventured to glance furtively at him, she was astonished and gratified to perceive that the tears had actu- ally gathered in his eyes, and that he was incapable of uttering a single word of thanks. Even the old Colonel sighed as he stroked Psyche's long silky brown ears.

"Ah," said he, "that's something like music! I don't know whether it's out of my regard for the old Higlanders, but the very named of anything Scotch warms my heart. Kiss your old father, Vic darling. You sing like a seraph."

Victoria bent over her father.

"Shall I sing another, papa dear?"

"Oh no—I—that is—pray excuse me!" burst in Sydney impulsively, and then he looked embarrassed.

The Colonel and Victoria turned to him in surprise.

"You were going to say something?" said the father.

The young man looked more and more confused. After a few moments he stammer- ed out:

"Well, I was going to ask Miss Kemp not to sing any more."

"Ah!" exclaimed the old soldier, delight- ed. "There's a compliment for you, Vic. Mr. Chevilstone thinks as I do—that, after that, nothing will do. He prefers to retain the impression of 'Auld Robin.' Isn't it so Mr. Chevilstone?"

"Yes, I confess it is," returned their visi- tor, looking at Victoria in a fashion that made her feel strangely agitated and cast down her eyes involuntarily.

"How absurd I am!" she said to herself angrily; yet she felt pleased and gratified, as much by the tribute to herself as by the compliment to her singing.

"Was there ever such a charming wo- man!" thought Chevilstone.

* * * * * *

A month or six weeks had elapsed, and Sydney Chevilstone had become thoroughly domiciled at the Beeches, Colonel Kemp's seat. Already was the young Anglo-Indian on such friendly and affectionate terms with his host that they had many a laugh over the ambiguous wording of the letter written by the former's father. Indeed, the young man habitually called the Colonel "guard- ian," and the old soldier's "ward" had to undergo much badinage from the visitors to the Beeches, the fact, of course, being that there was no real guardianship in the ques- tion. The whole mistake had arisen from the Colonel's too hasty interpretation of the letter from Mr. Chevilstone, Sr. Yet the veteran could not but notice that when the subject was alluded to there was a sort of sly smile on the young man's lips, as if there was some secret behind all this that he—the Colonel—was not a sharer in. It was not long, however, before the owner of the Beeches was enlightened on this head.

As to Victoria Kemp and Sydney Chevil- stone, both being young, good-looking, in- tellectual, accomplished and of similar tastes, what possible termination save one could there be to such an acquaintanceship? Sydney Chevilstone and Victoria Kemp were "over head and ears" in love with each other; and, though no explanation had yet taken place between them, each was conscious of the truth.

For a day in mid-October the Colonel and Victoria had planned their last picnic of the year, and by permission of the ranger it was to take place in Windsor Great Park. The picnic was to be small and select and to con- sist of only fifteen or sixteen, very intimate friends of the Colonel and his daughter.

For a more exquisite day than it turned out for this their last picnic for the season it would have been impossible to wish. The whole of the party were charmed with the success of the undertaking. Never were there such champagne and such lobster sal- ads, or such genial master and mistress of the ceremonies as the Colonel and his daugh- ter. So declared everybody.

The eating part of the business was hap- pily concluded; the Colonel and one or two of the older men were defying the rheumat- ism by lying at full length on the grass smoking their cigars, while as a matter of course, the younger members of the party had paired off and were talking all sorts of nonsense in couples.

Victoria Kemp and Sydney Chevilstone walking in one of the beautiful glades of the park, were at a considerable distance from their companions, but they did not appear to be aware of the fact, or, if they were it did not cost them any uneasiness.

They were laughingly discussing the mysterious letter of Mr. Chevilstone, Sr., which had introduced his son to the house- hold of the Kemps, and Victoria maintained that any one, after perusing it, would have supposed that a little boy or at any rate a great, growing lad, was about to be inflicted on them.

Chevilstone smiled, and asked what had been her own opinion.

"Well, I confess," said Victoria, smiling, "that I fancied we were to receive a little fellow, aged, perhaps, some 12 years. So persuaded was I of it that I told the house- keeper to get ready a little room which has never been used since the death of my brother, and which contains a cot"—here she glanced merrily at his six foot figure— "that you could not by any possibility have used."

"Oh, oh!" cried her amused listener. "Then how was it I found such a charming domicile awaiting me?"

"Why, we always keep a spare room ready for any chance arrival; and of course the butler when he had seen you, had sense enough to conduct you to the right apartment!"

"Ah, just so! And your father?"

"Oh, papa's idea was that we were to be troubled with a great hobbledehoy, who would eat enormously and—and'—"

"Well, Miss Kemp, 'and'—"

Victoria colored, and looked a little con- fused.

"It was only some of papa's nonsense, and, unless you insist—"

"I insist," said he mischievously, looking full into her eyes.

"Well then, papa thought you might make love to the maids."

Sydney Chevilstone frowned for a mo- ment and then laughed aloud.

"I am honored, I am sure! But listen Victoria."

This was the first time he had ever called her by her Christian name, and, though, with instinctive subtlety, she knew perfect- ly well what was coming, and not too well what her reply would be, all her woman's modesty rushed to her aid and she said as if she had only then become aware of the fact.

"What a distance we have strayed from our party Mr. Chevilstone! Had we not better return?"

"Not yet, I think," he answered, in a very tender but firm tone that she felt pow- erless to resist.

However, she made one more effort to escape hearing the very words she wished to hear; so she looked at he watch and said:

"Past five! We really must return and see the sun set over Woodlands; it is a love- ly estate, and almost adjoins papa's. It is quite a sight to see the last rays of the sun on that magnificent range of copper beech- es."

The young man smiled a curious smile.

"You admire Woodlands, then, Vic- toria?"

Again "Victoria!" This time the hot blood dyed her cheek and brow.

"Oh, yes, of course I do—anybody would! Its owner died only a year ago, and papa knew him well. We often visited there. It is a most lovely place."

"You do not know its present owner then?"

"No; he has not yet taken possession. All we know is that he is a gentleman who has lived much abroad. I dare say we shall become acquainted with him some day."

"I dare say you will."

"No doubt he is some crusty old nabob with a worn out liver, who lives on curries and mulligatawny soup, and who throws the dishes at the heads of his black ser- vants."

"No doubt he is."

"But then, one must be civil to next- door neighbors, you know."

"Oh, of course! Good breeding enjoins that. But I do not fancy the new owner of Woodlands will be such an ogre as you imagine."

"Why not?"

"Possibly I have the honor of his ac- quaintance."

"You!"—and Victoria looked up at him with unfeigned surprise.

"What is there so extraordinary in that?" asked he laughing.

"You do know the new owner of Wood- lands, then?"

"He stands before you."

Victoria Kemp's surprise was so great that she could not utter a word.

"Listen, Victoria, dearest," said the young man, taking both her hands. "You and your father have been the victims of a plot."

"A plot!" exclaimed the young lady; but she did not withdraw her hands.

"Yes; but before I tell you about it, I wish to ask you one question. We are neither of us children, we are neither of us, I think, likely to express our feelings in many words. You must have seen that I love you, Victoria; will you be my wife?"

It was a straightforward wooing indeed! No protestations—not a single unnecessary word! How different from the general run of lovers! But Victoria understood the straightforward, manly nature of Sydney Chevilstone: and admired his character, and she loved him. So she simply answered—

"Yes."

He put his arm around her and kissed her passionately.

"But about the plot, Sydney?" asked Victoria, after a brief interval.

"Oh, yes! Well, then, the letter was concocted expressly to deceive yourself and the Colonel."

"Oh!"

"Yes, dearest; the medical adviser who recommended me to pass two years in Europe was no other than myself. I was surgeon to the—th, as an army list would have shown the Colonel had he consulted it."

"To think we should have been de- ceived!"

"Yes, you fell into the trap easily. But, you see this was it. The late owner of Woodland, who, as you know, had neither kith nor kin, was my god-father, and at his death he bequeathed the estate and a large sum of money in truth to myself. Of course upon this I was determined to quit the army. While my father and myself were making inquiries about my new property, it oozed out that the owner of the adjoining estate, the Beeches, was no other than Colonel Kemp, my father's old comrade in arms."

"Ah!"

"Well, though my father and yours had not seen each other for some years, they had occasionally corresponded; and so, when my match-making sire heard that Colonel Kemp had an only child—a daughter—he proposed a very pretty little scheme. It was neither more nor less—than to join the two estates."

"It was very impertinent!" said Victoria, trying to appear angry.

"It was, I own."

"And I have a great mind to retract what I have said," she added, with a charming smile.

"Ah, I am not afraid! But listen. Of course my father and I thought that if I an- nounced myself as a man I should not be re- ceived at the Beeches as a permanent inmate but that if we so worded the letter as to leave it in doubt—"

"Yes, yes; you know that, once our guest, we should not be so rude as to turn you out."

"That's just it. And now will you for- give me, Victoria?"

"For what?"

"For having descended to a subterfuge unworthy of a gentleman."

She looked up at him, her brown eyes full of a tender light.

"It was not a right thing to do," she said; "but I am the gainer by it, and so I forgive you, Sydney."

The young man took his pardon from her lips.

"But," added Victoria. "I don't know what papa will say to all this."

But, after having heard the story of his "ward" the Colonel came to the conclusion that "all's well that ends well."

Lord Dufferin's Reward.

Lord Dufferin will receive a Marquisate for the admirable manner in which he has conducted affairs at Constantinople. The British Ambassador has done something to revive the older traditions of diplomacy, and to remind Europe that there is another, and often a better, way of carrying on interna- tional negotiations than the brutal Bismarck- ian method. Lord Dufferin has beaten the Turks at their own game. Their diplomacy is always supple and dilatory, and it suited the British Ambassador to meet the Turks with their own weapons. The truth is that neither party was very anxious to bring mat- ters to a point. The English Government was not eager that the convention should be signed, and the Turks were unwilling to en- ter into it on the only conditions on which England would agree. Both parties had thus resource to a dilatory diplomacy. The Turks had many difficulties to raise, but Lord Dufferin more than matched them. He had an unfailing supply of criticisms, objec- tions, proposals, and counter-proposals. When the convention was about to be sign- ed some new point was always raised, and thus the game was kept on from day to day and week to week. Then came the victory of Tel-el-Kebir, and the Turks found they had been outwitted and baffled. Lord Duf- ferin told the Sultan that the convention was no longer necessary, and the Sultan was bound to admit the force of the plea. The British Minister has since been consol- ing the Palace with profuse assurances of the friendliness and good-will of England. The Turks know very well, however, that they have been out-manœuvred by the Eng- lish Ambassador, but Lord Dufferin deserves well of his country for relieving them of dangerous allies at a critical moment. It is long since a diplomatic contest has been con- ducted with so much tact, adroitness, and success.

The Successful Man.

The man who succeeds is the popular man—the person who has hosts of acquaint- ances, and who does not hesitate to ask a favor, any more than he does to do one. He cultivates his acquaintances and blos- soms out before each one. He is always glad to see them, and always has a smile and a pleasant word. Beyond a certain point he is intimate with none, knowing that a man with strong friendships is sure to have some decided enemies, and an en- mity often is most inconvenient. The pop- ular man knows all the prominent members of the club; but he never neglects those who fill the ranks of mediocrity. He is especially thoughtful of his elders. Every- thing that comes to his mill is grist.

There is nothing hypocritical in all this. The popular man is what he seems to be. He wishes well to every one, himself in- cluded, and he would do no one an ill-turn. He wishes no one to do him harm. His desire is to make things pleasant to others that others may make things pleasant unto him. He does not neglect the harder work of life. If he is in a profession, he studies diligently for some hours each day, when there is no opportunity to cultivate the social part of his nature, or to render his relations with others more friendly. If he is in trade, he does not neglect to learn his business thoroughly from the bottom up. What he does he does well, no matter how small it is.

Such a man is sure to command success. He is thorough and can be depended upon in purely business relations, and in his so- cial life he charms and attracts his acquaint- ances, so that every one wants to help him. If he is a young lawyer, the elderly men, to whom he is always deferential in manner, think of him first when a little legal busi- ness comes in their way that will pay him well but is too small for them. He gets the job. If he is a young broker, speculators remember that he is a good fellow, and knowing that he is honest and capable, give him their commission, even in preference, perhaps, to a more repellant acquaintance who is more conveniently at hand. If a so- cial gathering is lacking in one member, he is always thought of as the one to fill the vacant place. Women smile on him, and his chances of marrying well are tenfold better, even if he is poor, than a more se- date and quiet man of possibly much great- er force of character.—The Hour.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Two thousand Indians were lately en- gaged in picking wild hops in Puyallup Val- ley, Washington Territory.

The Victoria Standard says the water in the harbor and Straits has been full of whale food for some two weeks or more, giving it a peculiar reddish brown color.

At Juneau City, Sitka, the placer dig- gings are doing well, miners making from $20 to $40 to the hand per day. The Idaho left Fort Wrangel at 8 p.m. on the 19th inst, and Karter Bay on the following day. She brought down $11,000 in dust from Harris- burg in which vicinity quartz prospecting is still being actively prosecuted.

"Honest John" of the Columbian says: There is reason to believe that there is more than one Chinese establishment in New Westminster into which Indian girls of ten- der years are enticed, drugged with opium and debauched. It is to be hoped that the Indian agent and the civic authorities will unite in a determined effort to stamp out these places of infamy. There is reason for believing that if these doings on the part of Chinese are not checked there may be trouble between them and the Indians.

Kootenay is a good wheat country, and two pioneer flour mills are being erected, one of which will be in operation the coming fall. Several bands of horses and cattle have passed through the country for the North-West recently, and the Hon. R. L. T. Galbraith, M. P. P., informs us that Mr. Laiser, of Spokane Prairie, will start in a few days with 200 head of cattle to set- tle at the Columbia Lakes, from which point he expects to supply the Canadian Pacific Survey party of 75 men with beef.

Reports of crops and stock in the interior are of the most satisfactory character.—— The construction of the bridge at Boston Bar is delayed owing to the rapidly rising water. ——Large quantities of freight are going out of Yale bound for the interior.——Fraser river rose eight feet last week, but is now falling.——Opposite Yale the Chinese and white mining claims are paying $3 to $4 to the hand per day.——Recently a large rock rolled down the bank above the Big Tun- nell and badly bent the rail. Again yester- day a few tons of rock fell upon the track near Sailor's Bluff, something over half a dozen miles from Yale, and it took some time to clear the track. The dangerous condition of the road and tunnels causes considerable uneasiness to travellers by the cars.—Victoria Standard.

The Walla Walla Statesman of the 9th inst., speaking of the new pass through the Selkirk range of mountains, says: The border land of Her British Majesty's do- minions, across the 59th parallel, is now as- suming unusual importance, owing to the discovery of a new pass in the Selkirk range, which one was never before supposed to ex- ist. Major Rogers, of the Canadian Pacific railway, is the discoverer of this important pass, which is henceforth to be known as the Roger's Pass. The discovery cannot be over-estimated, for it will give an impetus to the building of the road it never before had; as it saves the length of road around the Upper Columbia Big Bend, and will make the Canadian Pacific some 500 miles shorter than any line now, or being built.

The Crops in Manitoba.

The crop report prepared by the Assist- ant Traffic Manager, Mr. Harden of the C. P. Railway, has appeared and contains re- turns from 88 points from agents of the Company and postmasters throughout the Manitoba and the North-West. The season on the whole was favorable. The spring was late, and in many places wet, so that seed- ing was delayed, while the fall being remark- ably dry, did not suit root crops, although of course, it enabled farmers to house their grain in fine condition. Rust is reported from only one point, Reinland, near Emer- son. At Bowbray, 90 miles from Emerson, there was a hail storm on July 24th, which seriously damaged grain. Late and early frosts are reported from one or two points, but crops throughout the Province at large did not suffer to any appreciable extent from that cause. The average yield of wheat from all points is 32 bushels per acre: the largest yield reported was at Millford, where 104 bushels were threshed off two acres. The smallest yield was in Bowbray districts, where the July hail storm played havoc with the crops. The yield of oats all over averaged 44 bushels per acre, barley 30, roots from 250 to 500, and peas were grown from 20 to 25 bushels; flax seed was grown and the yield was fair; the average yield of potatoes was 274 bushels, the larg- est yield reported being at Selkirk, where 400 bushels were raised off half an acre. An enormous area of new land was broken up this year, ready for next year's crop. Stock- raising is still in its infancy. In some of the older districts farmers are importing good breeds from Eastern Canada, and the richness of the grass will enable them to turn out summer-fed stock at the minimum of cost. Agricultural machines are coming into use all over. In one district 45 self- binders were at work in a field. Settlers everywhere complain of the difficulty of get- ting produce to market, and the cry is uni- versal for railways. Owing to the distance from the market settlers from many parts have been deterred from growing grain. It is only a year and a half since the Syndicate took over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and already the new road has been pushed 500 miles westward; from this trunk there runs the C. P. R., Southwestern and Sou- thern Colonization to the south, and in a north-westerly direction, the Portage, Westbourne and North-western, while twelve other branch lines, mostly running into southern Manitoba, have been project- ed. Settlers at one or two points com- plain of speculators and land companies locking up land for speculation purposes, while at other parts new arrivals were dis- satisfied with the Government land regula- tions. Other settlers are rapidly amassing wealth, and new arrivals are contented and hopeful. From January to June three thou- sand settlers entered the country; from July to the end of September that number was probably increased by fifteen thousand. The report closes with the admonition to emigrants not to come up till May or June. This year 18,000 settlers arrived during the first four months of the year, when travel- ling on the prairie was difficult, and emi- grants' patience was sorely tried by floods and bad trade. In May and June the bad weather is over, and the settler can choose his homestead and set about cultivating to the best advantage.

MARKDALE, OCT. 26TH, 1882.

A BEASTLY QUARREL.

A MAN STABBED.

On Saturday night last, about 10 o'clock. a quarrel arose at Mrs. Caswell's boarding house in this place between George Beatty of the 9th line, Euphrasia, and some of the boarders who work on the ballast train, one of whom in the row, picked up a carving knife and stabbed Beatty, who cried out "I am stabbed," when he was at once taken to one side and Dr. Armstrong called in. On examination he was found to have a wound on the forehead and an ugly one in his back which bled profusely. They are, however, not of a serious nature.

The following day a warrant was issued and one John Doyle arrested, and on Monday a Magistrates court held, Wm. Brown, Esq., presiding. The prisoner, Doyle, is from Toronto where he has been a resident some 18 years, and is a young man, very little, if any, over 20 years of age. His chum, who it is said was the chief cause of the row, disappeared on Sunday, and has not been seen around here since. The prisoner at court did not deny the charge, but set up self defence as a plea. He was, however, committed to gaol to stand his trial, which will take place next week. Beatty is laid up for the present, not being able to attend the trial, but will likely be all right in a few days.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Hill Bros. have their elevator closed in, roofed and painted, and are now ready for grain.

The Presbyterian church is roofed and ready for plastering.

Mr. Reynolds has removed into his new residence.

Mr. Dunlop's new brick building is now occupied by the new baker, Mr. Clark.

The new sidewalk is nearing the station.

A $20.00 BIBLE REWARD.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for November, among which is the following: We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us which verse in the New Testament Scriptures (not the New Revision) contains the greatest number of words by November 10th, 1882. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner November 15th, 1882. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer for which they will receive the December Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20.00 to you; Cut it out, Address RUTLEDGE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Easton, Penna.

Mr. Masson has returned from Manitoulin court, and will be in Markdale on Friday and Saturday.

One thousand women wanted to try McFarland's thirty cent tea; it is perfection.

TAKEN TO THE CITY.—George Harcourt, the T. G. & B. baggageman who accidently shot Mrs. Taylor while shooting "divers" at the Queen's Wharf a few days since was taken to the city from Owen Sound on Monday night in charge of Detective Brown. He was admitted to bail. Mrs. Taylor is improving.

The verdict of most of the people of this section is that W. J. McFarland's Teas are the best and cheapest

On a car being opened at Moncton, N. B., a few days ago, which had been sealed in Toronto, a tramp was found crouching between a number of sewing machines. The fellow had been locked up in the car for six days, the time occupied in the trip. He had torn the paper from the machines and burned it to warm himself, and the smoke had almost suffocated him. He soon recovered and was allowed to go.

Quality is the true test of cheapness in that since McFarland's tweeds are cheap; McFarland's dress goods are cheap; McFarland's shawls are cheap; McFarland imports direct.

Rheumatism. This painful disease that so often cripples for life, arises from poison circulating in the blood, and often from an excess of acid. Inflammation is developed in the Muscles, ligaments and joints, by colds, damp clothing, &c., Liniments are serviceable to relieve, among many, Hagyard's Yellow Oil is preferable. To eradicate the rheumatic poison from the system, nothing can surpass Burdock Blood Bitters.

THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE is still improving and is without doubt the best agricultural paper published in Canada. We cannot but admire the independant course it has pursued during the ten years we have read it. Having made arrangements for clubbing our paper with it, we are in a position to supply the two to the end of 1883 for $1.85, cash, in advance.

Thos. B. McComb who has removed two buildings in this place with his moving apparatus and proved himself fully competent for the business, is now at liberty and will remove or raise buildings of any size. Any person wishing to change the location of any of their buildings will do well to communicate with him, Meaford P. O.

A FACT.

If you suffer from Chronic Disease, and have little faith in advertised remedies and have sought vainly for a cure, consult your druggist, or address T. Milburn & Co. Toronto, for proof positive regarding the Merits of Burdock Blood Bitters, the Great Regulating Blood purifying tonic, that acts on the liver, kidneys, stomach, bowels and skin.

Manitowaning is now well supplied with churches. Episcopal, 1849; Methodist Presbyterian, 1877-8; Baptist, 1882.

Mrs. B. M. Gifford, of Port Rrowan, was for many years a sufferer of Liver Complaint, and a serious complication of diseases. In a recent letter she says that she has only taken two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and has nearly recovered her health, and authorizes us to use her name in advertising to suffering humanity.

Four years ago there were only three municipalities on this Island; now there are seven. Four years ago we only had two agricultural societies; now we have five.—Manitoulin Expositor.

C. F. Knight, dentist, will be at the Markdale House on Tuesday next, the 31st, when he will be prepared to execute all work entrusted to him in a satisfactory manner. He will in future be in Markdale the last Tuesday in every month.

On Friday evening, 20th inst., at the raising of a log barn on the farm of Mr. Felix Farden, Glenelg, a log fell from the building. All managed to get clear except Mr. W. Webster. The log struck him dislocating his ankle and fracturing one of the bones of the leg.

All persons suffering from Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Loss of Voice or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, are requested to call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of charge, which will convince them of its wonderful Merits and show what a regular dollar-size bottle will do. Call early.

The British Government insists that Arabi Pasha shall have the benefit of a first-class English lawyer to defend him; but the Egyptians, who did nothing to put down the rebellion, keeping at a safe distance while the English did the fighting, now claim the right to deal with the rebel leader, and would hang him right off, without allowing any defence. However, the British Government is in a position to dictate, and will see that he is properly defended.

BEST OF ALL.

Our rigorous and changable climate, and our mode of life induces frequent colds, that often lead to severe Coughs' Bronchitis and other lung troubles that are liable to end in Consumption. The best and pleasant remedy known for these difficulties is Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, to be obtained of any Druggist.

The Markdale Methodist S. S. Anniversary was held yesterday evening (Wednesday) in Dufferin Hall. The evening was very fine and there was a crowded house. Tea was served in the basement, after which all adjourned to the hall. The children's platform, which extended out about 16 feet and across the full width of the hall was handsomely decorated, having very striking imitations of palm trees and Jewish Tents, laden with harvest fruits and flowers, illustrating the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles. The Cantata was rendered in a creditable manner by the school and choir. Dr. Armstrong took his position at the organ and acted his part in his usual easy and masterly manner. The school gave evidence of being thoroughly trained, rendering the various parts throughout with marked ability, and reflecting great credit on Mr. Bowes, (the Superintendent) whose untiring efforts and matchless patience and perseverance in training the children, may chiefly be attributed in the grand success of the entertainment. The best order prevailed throughout, which is in itself worthy of commendation. The receipts amounted to about $50 net. During the intermission a beautiful easy chair was presented to the superintendant by Eddie Reynolds on behalf of the school, of which we will give further particulars next week.

SUDDENLY SEIZED.

Mr. Arthur Fisher, of the Toronto Globe observes: "On my last trip to the States, I caught a very bad cold from a severe wetting I received one night in the city of Philadelphia, which settled into a very bad case of rheumatism, and made me most miserable. I did not know what to do for it, and could not think for a long time, until I bethought me, that on previous visits to that side, I had always bought for Mr. Gay, of our paper, a couple of bottles of St. Jacobs Oil. I remembered also, fortunately, that the last two bottles had cured that gentleman of the rheumatism and so I resolve to purchase St. Jacobs Oil for my own use. I went at once to a drug store and made the purchase; that very night I began applying the Oil, and in two weeks time I was as well as ever."

The Egyptians have fallen, and their death cry "peccavia" (or I surrender) is heard; but the wretched creature Arabi Bey, who was only the tool of a Machiavelle behind the scenes, has been treated by a magnanimous generosity by General Wolseley and the British Government. Hence we wish five or ten thousand men and women, and as many boys and girls, to visit our new, fashionable and incomparable stock of goods, and we feel sure they will, one and all, cry 'paccavia' and secure to themselves bargains not to be had elsewhere in this country, consisting of Scarcely four months have elapsed since we opened business in Markdale, and we believe no firm in the county of Grey has, in the same number of years, opened out such a large, costly and varied stock, and the flattering patronage of an appreciative public causes us to treat with contempt the malignant rage of blind envy, as our business has far exceeded our most sanguine expectations when we opened out here. We are permanently located in Markdale; our footing being such we will continue with the same energy in the future as in the past to increase our business until it shall rival the oldest commercial houses in the county of Grey. Gas is not the order of our house but solid facts as all may see by giving us a call.

FIRE.—On Sunday, the 15th, while Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Wiggins, of Holland, were at church their barn by some means caught fire and was completely consumed with its contents, comprising 20 tons of hay, 400 bushels of oats, 150 of wheat, 80 of peas, a fanning mill and other articles. His loss will be severe as there was only $300 of insurance.

SURPRISE PARTY.—On Tuesday evening a large number of the citizens of Flesherton met at the residence of Mr. M. Richardson, in honour to Mr. W. F. Doll, prior to his taking up his abode in Markdale. The party first assembled at Mr. Hooper's, and then proceeded by twos and threes to Mr. Richardson's, carrying with them baskets containing all sorts of good things. They took possession of the house, and soon were busily engaged in social chat, and all kinds of parlor and other games. This was kept up until 11:30 when lunch was served; after which the company joined hands in a circle and, with great gusto, sang that old song, "Auld Lang Syne." Then came the "National Anthem," after which the company retired, wishing Mr Doll success in the future.—Advance.

DO NOT BE DECEIVED.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise and which really does as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. ACCIDENT.—On Monday night last week Mr. Thos. Myles, son of the Reeve of Euphrasia, was thrown from the back of the horse he was riding. He came down on his back amid a heap of stones. Dr. Parsons is in attendance on the young man, who, the physician hopes, has not suffered any irreparable injury. We hope he will soon be around again.

W. Masson, of Owen Sound, arrived here last week for the purpose of preparing papers for administering the Tinkis estate and looking after the general interests of the heirs. It is understood that the extensive business of the late Mr. Tinkis is in a very favorable condition indeed. Mrs. Tinkis expressed her thanks for Mr. Masson's promptness in coming and the satisfactory manner in which he performed the duty entrusted to him.—Manitoulin Expositor.

A meeting of the Directors of Glenelg Agricultural Society was held last week. The result of their fall show was satisfactory generally. It was decided to have a "bee" on Wednesday (yesterday) for the purpose of making improvements on the grounds, especially the speeding course, which they will have in good condition for another year. The following resolution was passed:—"Moved by Mr. Alex. Mercer, seconded by Mr. Edward Davis, and carried, that Wm. Masson, Esq., of Owen Sound and Markdale, be registered as a life member of Glenelg Agricultural Society in recognition of his valuable services in purchase of show grounds for said society, and in consideration of his liberal contributions and for other services."

MCFARLAND'S NEW ELEVATOR.—The raising of the frame work of the above building was completed on Monday last, having taken eleven days, and is, without exception, the finest building of the kind in the county. It is 50x70 feet, and nearly 70 feet high. It was planned and laid out by W. G. Richards, builder and contractor, and reflects great credit on him as a mechanic, who is master of his business, not a false mortice or drawbore in the whole, and every joint a complete fit. The capacity of this elevator is 80,000 bushels. Mr. Thos. B. McComb, of Meaford, rendered great assistance with his block and tackle without which it would have been almost impossible to have raised the heavy timbers. We are glad to see this fine storehouse and also that of Hill Bros. erected and that without an accident of any kind.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

The Review at Cairo.

The London Standard's correspondent telegraphs a long account of the review which took place at Cairo. He says:—The square in front of the Abdin Palace presented a brilliant appearance. Upon one side was a long wooden pavilion, gayly decorated. In the centre was the dais of the Khedive. The Sultan's flag flew overhead, the royal standard of England was on the right, the Egyptian flag on the left. The pavilion was filled with Europeans and Egyptian officials, very few unofficial natives having a place there. Opposite, with a space between for the march of the troops, was the general's staff, with a bodyguard of marines in bright red coats and white trousers. General Wolseley took up his place in front of the Khedive's raised dais.

At four o'clock the march-past began. At the head of the cavalry division rode General Drury Lowe, with his staff. His handling of his troops during the war places him on the roll of distinguished cavalry leaders. Borrodaile's battery of Horse Artillery had the place of honor. After the Horse Artillery came the stately Household Cavalry, with drawn swords, in sections of fours, all looking in their fighting kit very different from, but certainly not less effective than, the gorgeous cavalry who file before the the Queen at Windsor. Scarcely inferior in size of men or horses were the Fourth and Seventh Dragoon Guards. Following these came the Nineteenth Hussars, perhaps the most smartly turned out body of cavalry upon the ground. Following the Hussars came the Mounted Infantry, rifles at rest. From the fifth of August to the end of the war this little body has been in almost daily conflict with the enemy. In every fight they were the first to begin and the last to finish. The Indian cavalry next filed past, a splendid and picturesque body, the curved swords of the Second and Sixth Bengal cavalry flashing in the sun and the pennons of the Thirteenth Lancers making a gay show. Their array was no whit less steady and disciplined than that of the best English horsemen, and the effect of the spectacle on the Egyptians in the pavilion and upon the crowd in the square was very marked. After the cavalry thirty guns of the Horse Artillery—no finer could be seen in the world—rumbled through the square, their quiet, business-like look being all the more effective after the gay show of the Indian horsemen.

The bands, which had hitherto been playing a lively cavalry trot, now changed the time, and a march heralded the approach of the blue jackets contingents, that from Ismaila under Captain Fitzroy, that from Alexandria—chiefly the men who had done good service in the armor clad train—under Commander Henderson. The blue jackets have done brilliant service during this war in a great variety of ways. Upon the present occasion they proved that in a march past they can rival the most perfectly drilled infantry, and a German officer who was present included them as among the best troops on the ground. Next to them came the garrison of marine artillery under Colonel Tewson. The appearance af the Duke of Connaught with his staff now indicated the approach of the Brigade of Guards. No need to critise their marching, as, with ranks closely locked, they passed in solid column to the "British Grenadier's March." The leading company of the Scots Guards attracted special admiration, the men averaging six feet two inches in height—certainly the highest average in the British army—and the whole brigade is a remarkably fine one. After the Guards the steady stream of British infantry flowed past in unbroken order, the regiments deploying into column as they entered the square, forming column of route at the double as they emerged from the narrow streets with perfect and unvarying discipline. After the Guards came the Eighteenth (Royal Irish), the Fifth (West Kent), the Eighty-fourth (York and Lancaster), and the Eighty-seventh (Irish Fusiliers). The battalion of Royal Marines followed in new red tunics and brilliantly white helmets, the troops quite eclipsing in appearance all which had passed before, and presenting a splendid spectacle. The marines completed the line of the first division.

General Willis, whose wound has quite healed, now left the side of the commander-in-chief and followed his division, and General Hamley and his staff approached. The drums and bagpipes next heralded the coming of General Alison's Highland brigade. When the detailed reports of the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, now on their way home, are received I think that it will be allowed that the advance of this brigade will be considered as one of the finest instances of military discipline, under the trying circumstances of a night march, in our military history. The Black Watch went pass to the tune of "Highland Laddie." Since Fontenoy, when this regiment covered the retreat of the English army, it has taken part in nearly every event in British military history. After the Black Watch the Cameronians strode past to the "Pibroch of Donald Dhu," which has been heard upon the scene of many a British victory. The first man who surmounted the entrenchments of Tel-el-Kebir was Private Donald Cameron, of this regiment, who fell dead, shot through the head. The Gordon Highlanders and the Seventy-fourth, equal in physique and appearance to the leading regiments, completed the brigade. Then came the fourth brigade from Alexandria, led by General Sir Evelyn Wood, upon whose breast glittered three lines of medals. The Sixtieth rifles completed the march past of the Second division.

The Indian contingent, under Generals Macpherson and Tanner, finished the display. The Seventy-second (the Seaforth Highlanders) headed the division, nearly every man wearing the Afghan medal and Candahar cross, and they were generally pronounced by the spectators to be the finest body of men on the ground. The wiry, seasoned soldiers looked, indeed, almost a different race of men to the comparative youths of the other corps. The Twentieth Paunjaubees, almost entirely Sikhs and Afghans, and the Second Belooches well represented the Imperial Indian army. The latter regiment, in its red Zouave trousers and green tunics, with long hair and tall, square built figures, had a particularly warlike mien and attracted the admiration of all onlookers.

But little sign of feeling was manifested by the crowds in the streets, who watched the display in gloomy silence. The great majority of the population probably view with a sense of relief the end of the war, but it is certainly not the case that their sympathies are with us, or with the Khedive, whom the troops have brought back.

Much of the credit for the success of yesterday's review must be given to Major-General Dormer, who had the chief arrangement of it. The passing of 17,000 troops through the narrow streets and small square without a single halt or hitch was a vastly more difficult matter than that of getting four times the number ranged in review order in Hyde Park.

The entire march past took exactly one hour and a half. There were in all 781 officers, 17,266 men, 4,320 horses and 60 guns.

The Child in the Printing Office.

Who is the Man that is looking so hard at the Piece of Paper? He is an Intelligent Compositor. Why does he hold the Paper so close to his Eyes? Because the Correspondent that wrote it makes Hen tracks. What is he saying? He is saying, "I can't make out this stuff." And who is the Other Man going to the Case? That is the furious Foreman. What does he Want? He is going to Help the Intelligent Compositor decipher the hen-Tracks. Do you Think he Can do it? I don't know; he can do most Anything, but I Guess that will be Too Much for him. Now I see an Other man Coming. What is he Going to do? That is the Precise Proof Reader. He is Going to Cast his eagle Eye over the Hen Tracks to See where they Lead to. Do you think He can Find it out? No; not without a Guide or a Calcium light. Now, here comes Another man—who is the Man? That is the Able Editor. Where did he come From? From his Den. Now all the Men are close together—see! their Heads most touch—and they are Looking every One of them at the Piece of Paper. What do they do That for? Because they Are Concentrating their Giant intellects upon the piece of Paper to see What the hen-Track Correspondent means by his Hieroglyphics. Have they Found out? No, they are stumped. Now they are going Away from the Case. Yes. And one of the Men has chucked the Piece of Paper into the Stove. Why does he do That? Because he can't read the hen-Tracks. Who is the Small Boy that has a Grin on his face, and his Hat turned up in Front? He is the Office Boy. What is the Able Editor Saying to him? He is telling him to go after the Long Range shot Gun. What for? Because the Able Editor wants to go hunting after the hen-Track Correspondent. Will he hurt him? Yes he will, if he Catches him. Do you think the Correspondent ought to be Killed? Certainly.

A Thames Launch Propelled by Electricity.

Having been one of a privileged party of four, the first ever propelled upon the waters of the river Thames by the motive power of electricity, I think some details of this latest departure in the applications of electric science may be of interest.

At half past 3 this afternoon I found myself on board the little vessel Electricity, lying at her mooring off the wharf of the works of the Electrical Power Storage Company, at Millwall. Save for the absence of steam and steam machinery the little craft would have been appropriately called a steam launch. She is 26 feet in length and about 5 feet in the beam, drawing about 2 feet of water, and fitted with a 22-inch propeller screw. On board were stowed away under the flooring and seats, fore and aft, forty-five mysterious boxes, each a cube of about 10 inches in dimensions. These boxes were nothing else than electric accumulators of the latest type as devised by Messrs. Sellon and Volckmar, being a modification of the well-known Plante accumulator. Fully charged with electricity by wires leading from the dynamos or generators in the works, they were calculated to support power for six hours at the rate of four-horse power. These storage cells were placed in electrical connection with two Siemens's dynamos of the size known as D 3, furnished with proper reversing gear and regulators, to serve as engines to drive the screw propeller. Either or both of these motors could be "switched" into circuit at will.

In charge of the electric engines was Mr Gustave Phillipart, Jr., who has been associated with Mr. Volckmar in the fitting up of the electric launch. Mr. Volckmar himself and an engineer completed, with the writer, the quartet who made the trial trip. After a few minutes' run down the river, and a trial of the powers of the boat to go forward, slacken, or go astern at will, her head was turned citywards, and we sped—I cannot say steamed—silently along the southern shore, running about eight knots an hour against the tide. At 37 minutes past 4 London bridge was reached, where the head of the launch was put about, while a long line of onlookers from the parapets surveyed the strange craft that without steam or visible power—without even a visible steersman—made its way against wind and tide. Slipping down the ebb, the wharf at Millwall was gained at one minute past 5, thus in twenty-four minutes terminating the trial trip of the Electricity.

For the benefit of electricians I may add that the total electromotive force of the accumulators was 96 volts, and that during the whole of the long run the current through each machine was steadily maintained at 24 amperes. Calculations show that this corresponds to an expenditure of electric energy at the rate of 3 1-11 horse-power.

It is now forty-three years since the Russian Jacobi first propelled a boat upon the waters of the Neva by aid of a large but primitive electro-magnetic engine, worked by galvanic batteries of the old type, wherein zinc plates were dissolved in acid. Two years ago a little model boat was shown in Paris by M. Trouve, actuated by accumulators of the Faure-Planté type. The present is, however, not only the first electric boat that has been constructed in this country, but the very first in which the electric propulsion of a boat has been undertaken on a commercial scale.—Silvanus P. Thompson.—London Times.

A Western Delicacy.—Toussaint, Ratte & Co., Main street merchants, received 1,500 pounds of dried buffalo meat, about 600 pounds of pemmican and a large quantity of fur from the West yesterday. The pemmican sells for 35 cents a pound. Yesterday the firm sold nearly a bale of the nutritious delicacy to parties who intended sending it to friends in the East.—Winnipeg Times.

FACTS AND INCIDENTS.

Notes of Interest from all Parts of the Globe Entertainingly Arranged.

The revised census gives the population of Scotland at 3,735,673, an increase of 11 per cent. since 1871, a rate of progress not exceeded since the third decade of the present century. In 1880 the population was 1,600,-900.

Some nurserymen are so much impressed with the eloquent nomenclature lately adopted at a convention of undertakers, who resolved to call themselves henceforth "funeral directors," that they propose to assume the designation of "arboreal manipulators."

Prof. Torinelli has lately exhibited at the hospital of Santo Spirito in Rome a corpse preserved by him. This body, once in a state of incipient putrefaction, has been reduced by Mr. Torinelli to a state of freshness as if it had been dead only a few minutes. After six months the body turns into a complete mummification with no odor of any kind.

A man convicted of three grave crimes in one term of the Edgar county (Ill.) court. For one of these he was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, for another fourteen years, and for the third the incarnation was to be "during the remainder of his natural life"—which would appear to destroy his interest in the former two punishments.

A writer on odors and their recognition, in the Journal of Science, says: "Take an ox, a sheep, or a goat to the country where flora is strange, and he will browse upon plants analogous in odor with those which have formed his food in his native land. But whenever he perceives a strange effluvium given off, he avoids the plant as doubtful." A superfluous bear at the Paris Zoo had a bun with prussic acid on it given him. But Bruin was not to be caught that way. He pushed it into the water, and not until the odor was entirely gone did he eat it. The poison had then lost its force. Animals have pronounced tastes in odors. The literal in "fine frenzy rolling" of the cat in catnip is notorious, while the pard and panther grow amiable beneath the influence of lavender water.

A man of science and an epicure is authority for the statement that the reason of the superior taste of the fish served in Holland is that the Dutch fishermen kill their fish as soon as they are taken from the water, instead of leaving them to die slowly out of their element. He claims that this slow death softens the tissues.

An invasion of Asiatic cholera from Egypt and India is apprehended in Europe, and French statisticians are prompted to recall the devastations inflicted by the pest in Paris in previous epidemics of the present century. In 1832 there were 12,700 deaths in the great city in the one month of April. The epidemic lasted altogether 189 days, and called for a total of 18,402 victims. At that time the population of Paris was only 645.000. In 1848 there was an epidemic that lasted 9 months, and carried off 16,165 persons. In 1853 the cholera caused the death of 9,216 victims, and in 1865 there was a death roll of 12,000. During each of these epidemics there was great mortality also in the west of France, and it is not strange, therefore, that the present reports of another approaching epidemic are received with much uneasiness.

The "difficulty" between Turkey and Greece is over. The Turks who wished at first to "compromise" the matter by handing back two-fifths of the property which they seized, but which did not belong to them, have given back the whole and thus settled the affair. Greece owes her success to her own firm attitude. She showed that she was willing, rather than give up what has been awarded to her, to precipitate a struggle for which the Great Powers were not prepared, and so, in order to prevent trouble, the Powers compelled Turkey to stand and deliver. Greece's claims are not finally settled, and she has learned just now to proceed in order to obtain satisfaction.

Keep Out the Cold Air.

It is much better to have the ventilation of our dwellings under control than to have a constant impouring of air, no matter how cold it may be. The windows, especially in houses built as cheaply as possible, let in all around (and especially where the two sashes meet,) an astonishing amount of air, so much that in severe weather it is almost impossible to make the room comfortably warm. By checking this inflow of cold air from without, the same amount of fuel that before failed to make the room warm enough, will be so much more effective that considerably less coal or wood will be burned. "Weather strips" of various kinds have been invented to be used around windows and doors for the purpose to which we have referred. The essential part of these is a narrow strip of rather stiff India-rubber fabric, attached to a strip of wood or metal, which may be fastened to the window in such a manner that the rubber will cover the cracks between the sashes and the frames, and elsewhere. Those strips are very useful, but are not to be had in all places; besides, while not very costly, they involve an outlay which many would gladly avoid. Before the rubber strips were introduced, woollen ones were in common use. The material known as "list" or "listing," the marginal strips being woven on broadcloth and other goods, is convenient, and costs little or nothing. This material is not obtainable everywhere, nor is it the best substitute for the window strips. By pasting strips of paper around the sashes the current of air can be kept out quite as completely as by any other method. Brown paper will answer as well as any, and if the job be neatly done, it will not be unsightly. When no longer needed, the paper may be pulled off after it has been wetted with warm water. One sash in each room should be left for necessary ventilation, and some movable strip, such as lath, covered with cloth, provided to close its cracks if necessary. A strip of board or plank, covered with some fabric, to be used to close the crack at the bottom of each door, will be found very useful.

A Portable Bank.—The Bank of Montreal has given orders for a portable building, which will be shipped to Regina shortly, and a branch of the leading financial institution of the Dominion opened there.

Lord Dufferin's Success.

The cable brings word that Lord Dufferin is to be made a Marquis for his diplomatic services. The career of Lord Dufferin, still a comparatively young man, has been a most brilliant one. He is the son of the fourth Baron Dufferin, his mother being one of the beautiful Sheridan sisters. He was educated at Oxford, but left that university without taking a degeee. While still a minor he succeeded to his father's title, and under Lord John Russell's first administration he was lord in waiting on the Queen. He travelled from Oxford to Ireland, accompanied by a friend, in 1847, and published an account of his experiences. In 1859 he made a voyage to Iceland in a yacht, and wrote an account of the expedition under the title of "Letters from High Latitudes." He was sent to the East in 1860 by Lord Palmerston to make inquiries into the massacre of the Christians there, and for his services he was made a K. C. B. In 1872 he was appointed Governor-General of Canada. His administrations of affairs in the Dominion was most successful. Harvard University conferred on him in 1878 the honorary degree of LL.D. Since then he has been sent to St. Petersburg as ambassador in a time of great difficulty, and thence to Constantinople. He has been the recipient, perhaps, of more titles, distinctions, and posts of honor than any man of his time. He was created an English baron in 1850, nominated a Knight of St. Patrick in 1863, appointed Lord Lieutenant of County Down in 1864, sworn a Privy Councillor in 1868, and was made an Earl of the United Kingdom in 1871. Of the adage, "Nothing succeeds like success," we have a striking illustration in the careers of Lord Dufferin and Sir Garnet Wolseley.

Gen. Wolseley's Secret Assistance.

Among other plausible attempts at robbing Sir Garnet of his glory in winning the fight at Tel-el-Kebir, I hear it suggested that he was greatly helped by dissensions in the enemy's camp. There is no doubt to Orientals of all classes back-sheesh is irresistible; and we know that in the last Russo-Turkish war, gates were opened and stronge positions sold for money. If the secret history of the recent war ever be made public, we may find that Wolseley did not disdain a single chance of securing success, and made friends of his foes when he could. The knowledge that resistance would be half-hearted may well have braced him to an enterprise which would otherwise have been hazardous, not to say foolhardy, in the extreme. It has been proved to demonstration that the frontal attack of works defended by the breechloader is almost hopeless. We have seen it in the last wars, and that of Egypt ought to have been no exception to the general rule. Tel-el-Kebir, with its double line of skilfully-built well-armed intrenchments, was strong enough to have cost us half the small force Sir Garnet launched so gaily against it; for was there reasonable hope of ultimate success, even at the price of a terriqle butcher's bill? Without being captious or hypercritical, I am inclined to endorse the suspicions of those who think that Wolseley fought with other weapons than those of open war. If he did not, he assumed an awful responsibility, and, had he suffered defeat at Tel-el-Kebir, would have been forever disgraced for so lightly encountering such a terrible risk.—London World.

QUEER SUICIDES.

The wife of Adam Elling of Union Deposit, Pa., lay down beside her dead child and cut her throat.

George W. Foster, a printer, killed himself in the jail at Syracuse on account of shame at his incarceration.

Ill health caused John Mayerle of Dubuque to shoot himself through the heart. His young widow is insane.

Bronco Sam of Laramie City committed suicide through jealousy of his Cherokee bride. He, however, shot her dead first.

"To find rest," said Bernard Creamer of Baltimore, "I swallow this ounce of laudanum." He had been in ill health for a long time.

Mrs. Ellen Frazer of Toledo, to escape the pains of neuralgia, committed suicide by hanging herself over the table in the dining room.

Katie Dufield, the 20-year-old daughter of Henry Dufield, of New Orleans, drowned herself because her mother insisted upon her washing the dishes before going to visit a sister.

Jesse W. Banks, a farmer 35 years of ago, near Decatur, Ill., could not live happily with his young wife and so he hanged himself. He had twice before tried poison and the razor.

John Dill, a farm laborer at Cedar City, upon being discharged, spent a day in card playing and drinking, then went to his late employer's residence and in sight of his family blew out his brains.

As Carl Heining, a poor jeweller of Denver, was refining $12 worth of gold dust at a stove it was lost by the breaking of the refining glass. He instantly washed a cup clean, filled it with poison, swallowed the dose, and in an hour was dead.

One of the most terrible and determined of suicides was that of Louis Kompf, a powder maker, of Alameda County, Cal., who blew himself up with a cartridge which he made for the purpose. He probably laid it upon his neck and then fired it. Near his remains was found a torn letter which was plainly written by a child. It read: "Dear Papa: When are you coming back? I am very good. I have my five cents yet. Is there much fruit ripe in the country?"

After taking a look at the moon, George Farrant and Ellen Hickman stood on the banks of the river in London ready to drown themselves. Relatives had thwarted their proposed marriage, and they determined to die together. George tied his wrist to Ellen's and they jumped in. They were rescued, though unconscious. After being resuscitated they were imprisoned. At the trial their relatives relented, a marriage was arranged, and the Judge discharged the pair with a reprimand.

"Elephant" Potatoes.—Mr. Hugel Call, of Bolton, planted one peck of "White Elephant" potatoes, got from New York, and dug sixteen bushels nice tubers as the product this fall. Who beats that?—St. John's News.

The Cultivation of Beauty.

Beauty is superior fitness, as a Darwi[n] would say, and in this respect, too, t[he] pre-eminence of the ancient Greeks w[as] probably the outcome of their general p[hysi]cal and mental superiority to their fell[ow]men, though they themselves believed [in] the existence of a chemical pan-cosmet[ic]. In the trial of the arch-quack Cagliost[ro] it came out that, during the twelve ye[ars] from 1765—'77, he had realized three m[il]lion francs from the sale of his "Recipe [of] Beauty," a recipe which has been m[ore] eagerly searched for than the philosophe[r's] stone, or the secret of longevity. Andr[eas] Cisalpinus ma[de] the notable discovery th[at] an ointment of crushed locusts and mist[le]toe-juice would treble the charms of t[he] fairest woman. "What must I do to beco[me] very beautiful?" the damsel in "D[on] Quixote" asks the enchanted Moor's he[ad]. "Que seas muy honrada—be very continen[t]," replies the head. Paracelsus recommen[ds] meadow-dew, gathered in the morning wh[en] the May-moon is on the increase; and Mo[n]taigne inquires into the habits of the m[ost] well-favored tribes of every country, b[ut] confesses that the problem is rather [an] evasive one, the coast-dwellers of Swed[en] being as distinguished for the comeliness [as] the highlanders of Aragon, and the N[or]mandy cider-drinkers not less than [the] Tuscan wine-drinkers. His only gene[ral] rule, however, still holds good: that o[ut]door dwellers are never wholly ill-favor[ed], nor in-door workers altogether lovely; a[nd] we might say the same of alcohol-drink[ers] and total abstainers: the schnapps-w[or]shipping natives of the Tyrolese highlan[ds] make amends by their active out-door li[fe] as Lowell factory-girls by their teetotalis[m]. There is a good deal in race, thou[gh]. "Angeli sunt; non Angli," Pope Steph[en] III wrote more than a thousand years a[go] to Archbishop Cuthbert, who had sent [a] batch of Anglo-Saxon neophytes, and [a] trace of the same angelic features may s[till] be recognized among the little ragamuff[ins] of many a Schleswig-Holstein coast-villag[e], where men subsist on brandy, cheese, a[nd] sour rye-bread. Their neighbors, the Po[m]eranians, are a manful if not celestial gene[r]ation, and, in spite of their dreary moorland[s], very fond of out-door sports. But farth[er] east Nature succumbs to art, and t[he] northern Russians are about as o[ut]rageously unprepossessing as indoor-l[ife] and a combination of all vices co[uld] make the image of the Creator. Extrem[es] meet, though, and their Emperor has t[he] honor of commanding twelve regiments [of] the most godlike men of the present world, the lance-cuirassiers of the body-guard, r[e]cruited in the highlands of Lesghia a[nd] Daghestan. Nearly all the natives of t[he] Caucasus have that fatal gift of beauty wh[ich] made their land the favorite hunting-grou[nd] of the harem-agents, and this gave the C[zar] a pretext for treating it as a Turkish d[e]pendency. But no social degradation co[uld] counteract the combined influence of t[he] Caucasian climate, hardy habits, temperan[ce] and frugality, for the Circassian mountai[n]eers are teetotalers by religion and vegetari[ans] by preference—figs, honey, barley-cak[es] and milk, being the staples of their di[et]. They are physically self-made men, for th[e] language proves that their ancestors w[ere] Turanians—first-cousins of the owl-fac[ed] nomads of the Mongolian steppe.—Fr[om] "Physiognomic Curiosities," by Dr. L. O[ts]wald, in Popular Science Monthly for N[o]vember.

A Pitiful Defence.

A Cairo despatch says the evidence [of] Arabi's complicity in the June massacre [is] possibly insufficient to secure convictio[n], but there is little doubt that "not prove[n]" rather than "not guilty," will be the ve[r]dict of impartial minds. The 800 documen[ts] in the correspondence between Arabi an[d] various persons, which General Wolsele[y] captured after the battle of Tel-el-Kebi[r], have reached the Foreign Office. At the pr[i]vate investigations of rebel prisoners, mo[st] of them objected to being questioned in r[e]gard to events prior to the outbreak, Arab[i] especially urging that they were covered b[y] the Khedive's general pardon. Arabi de[clares] that the June massacres were prec[ipi]tated by the presence of the British flee[t] and he was in no way responsible for them. The Alexandria bombardment, in fact, wa[s] done after a mere twenty-four hours' notice, which was entirely too short to allow th[e] people to remove their goods or carry awa[y] their infirm, invalid, aged, children, an[d] produced a feeling of uncontrollable indigna[tion] among the natives, who believed th[e] Christians were in determined league to de[s]troy the country and depopulate it of its na[tive] people. Arabi alleges that he and hi[s] officers did all in their power to keep unde[r] control this dangerous feeling, and would have succeeded in preventing the outbrea[k] if Admiral Seymour had not been in such haste. It was the common belief among hi[s] staff that the British were well informed o[f] the dangerous temper of the populace, and knew that bombardment under the circum[stances] would drive the Egyptians into frenzy. Arabi said all bloodshed wa[s] caused by a Maltese stabbing an Arab, wh[o] was denouncing Admiral Seymour's con[duct]. In contradiction of the charges of re[bellion], Arabi produced evidence that h[e] was acting in perfect fealty to the Sulta[n] and Khedive.

Wolseley and Seymour.

Wolseley is an undergrown and spare man, lantern-jawed, with short grey hair and blon[d] moustache. He wears a yellow sun helmet wound about with a handkerchief of whit[e] and violet check; his red coat is opened a[t] the chest and spotted with many stains o[f] grease, he has a variegated necktie, a woolle[n] shirt of "loud" pattern, grey checked trou[sers], yellow riding boots and spurs, a oper[a] glass with a yellow case and strap, a yello[w] revolver belt, with cartridge case, yello[w] gauntlets, a violet pocket handkerchief stuc[k] in his red coat, a gigantic pair of black spec[tacles], and in his hand he flourishes a fan t[o] keep off the flies.

Admiral Seymour is thick-set, of middl[e] height, and comfortable round body, and his appearance at once suggests to the spec[tator] a life of good living and little exercis[e] on board ship. He wears a white su[n] helmet, a blue coat, white trowsers, yello[w] laced shoes, a navy sword, a drinking flask, a dirty linen haversack, out of which pr[o]jects a piece of cheese, and carries a walking stick.

A Pitiful Defence.

A Cairo despatch says the evidence o Arabi's complicity in the June massacre i possibly insufficient to secure conviction but there is little doubt that "not proven rather than "not guilty," will be the ver dict of impartial minds. The 800 document in the correspondence between Arabi an various persons, which General Wolseley captured after the battle of Tel-el-Kebir have reached the Foreign Office. At the pri vate investigations of rebel prisoners, mos of them objected to being questioned in re gard to events prior to the outbreak, Arab especially urging that they were covered by the Khedive's general pardon. A Pitiable Heir to Greatness.

There is a little child in England whom nature has treated with exceptional cruelty. It is a boy who can neither see, talk, hear, or walk. There is scarcely hope, if it should grow to manhood, that it will be little more than an animated clod, with some intelligence perhaps, but unable to take its part in any of the activities of life. Yet this afflicted child is the heir to the premier dukedom of England, and when its parents, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk are dead, he will become possessed of immense estates. By the time he is of age, a large portion of the city of Sheffield will be his, as the leases given long ago will then expire. His wealth, if divided, would enrich ten thousand families. But what a strange freak of fortune that this unhappy child, without any means of communicating with the world around him, should be in possession of property and a title which, if he could use them, would make him one of the most powerful nobles of this century.

A Fable.

One day an old Turkey took a Walk through the meadow to see how the Crops were getting along. Seeing a Hornet's Nest by a Stone Wall, she Fondly Imagined she could Hatch out the Contents. She sat down up on It, and did Hatch out the contents in about two Seconds. Five Minutes later she stood filled with Humiliation, Running her Bill through her Feathers and Attempting to Count the number of Perforations in her Breast, which looked very much like a Nutmeg-Grater. The Moral of this Fable teaches us that Squatting on other People's Property is a Perilous Proceeding; and that there are some Humble Institutions which cannot be Sat Upon.

The Cost of the War in Egypt.

Next to the natural character of the settlement which is to be carried out in Egypt, the cost of the war is the question in which the country is most interested. A good deal of exaggeration is prevalent on this point, and sums ranging from ten to twenty millions have been mentioned as likely to be the cost of the campaign. It is hardly necessary to say that this short war is not likely to entail so large a burden on the country.

When the vote of credit for $2,300,000 was taken, the Government based their circulation of the belief that the war would be over by the 15th of September. This expectation was fulfilled almost to the day; but as usual, the original estimate has turned out to be entirely inadequate. I believe that the expenditure connected with the war will be between four and five millions, and if it should not exceed the higher figure the country will not have much cause to complain. This is, of course, exclusive of the cost of the Indian Contingent, which will be over two millions, and part of which will almost certainly have to be borne by this country. —London World.

Who Should Suffer.

The many who daily suffer agony from corns, bunions, callous lumps, when the means of remedy can be so easily procured. Putnam's great remedy for corns is the new article, but it commands the confidence of every druggist in Canada, as all can testify that Putnam's Corn Extractor is a sure thing. The man who neglects this suggestion to try Putnam's Extractor ought to suffer. Use not "the article just as good." Flesh-destroying and dangerous substitutes are offered as a substitute for Putnum's. Of such beware.

A Question for a Young Men's Debating Society?—When a man's feelings are so great that he cannot express them, has he better send them by freight?

Mr. J. R. Seymour, Druggist, St. Catharines, writes that he finds an ever-increasing sale for Burdock Blood Bitters, and adds that he can, without hesitancy, recommend it. Burdock Blood Bitters is the grand specific for all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys. 9.

Classical Instructor in Latin.—"Miss B., of what was Ceres the goddess?" "Miss B.: she was the goddess of marriage." Instructor: "Oh, no; of agriculture." Miss B, (looking perplexed): "Why; I'm sure my book says she was the goddess of husbandry."

Mrs. Wm Allan, of Acton, says she has never been without a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil in the house for the last twenty years, and would not be for ten times the cost; adding that she has never known it to fail for Colds and Croup, Sore Throat, Stiff Neck, Burns, Scalds, etc. She concludes by saying, "if any one doubts its efficacy, refer them to me." 10.

"What are you going to do when you grow up, if you don't know how to cipher?" asked a teacher of a rather slow boy. "I am going to be a school teacher, and make the boys do all the cyphering," was the reply.

Biliousness, Indigestion, Canstipation—all forms of Dyspepsia yield at once to a few doses of Zopesa, the new compound from Brazil. A 10 cent sample proves it.

A father complaining of the way his children destroyed their clothing, said: "When I was a boy I only had one suit of clothes, and I had to take care of it. I was only allowed one pair of shoes a year in those days." There was a pause, and then a little chap spoke up, "I say, dad, you have a much easier time of it now you are living with us!"

A Good Investment.—Twenty-five cents expended to your druggist for a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil will allay more pain and cure more diseases than many dollars spent for ordinary medicines would do. Yellow Oil cures Rheumatism, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites, Sore Throat, Croup, Stiff Joints, Contracted Cords, and all Lameness and Inflammation. 8.

A Ghastly Joke.—Where do ghosts come from? From gnome man's land.

Deafness that is caused by colds, inflammation of the membrane of the ear, and Earache, is often cured by Hagyard's Yellow Oil, the great external and internal remedy for all Pain, Soreness, and Inflammation, Rheumatism, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites, Sore Throat, Croup, Contracted Muscles, etc. Never be without it. 12.

A Manly Virtue.—"Generous to a fault,' may be said of the majority of men—at least they are generous enough to their own faults.

VEGETINE.—This preparation is scientifically and chemically combined, and so strongly concentrated from roots, herbs and barks that its good effects are realized immediately after commencing to take it.

Sailor's Wit.—A lady at sea, full of apprehensions in a gale of wind, cried out among other pretty exclamations: "We shall all go to the bottom. Mercy on us! how my head swims!" "Madam, never fear," said one of the sailors; "you can never go to the bottom while your head swims."

Murder will out, so will the fact that Carboline, a deodorized extract of petroleum, the natural hair renewer and restorer, is the best preparation ever invented, and and excels all other hair dressings, as thousands of genuine certificates now in our possession abundantly prove.

"Yes," said the burlesque actress, "I think that editor is the meanest, most contemptible wretch in existence. He doesn't want me to succeed." "What has he done?" "Done! You know that scandal about me in Chicago?" "Yes; did he print it?" "Print it? No; he wouldn't; that's it."

HAVE YOU TRIED IT?—If so, you can testify to its marvellous powers of healing and recommend it to your friends. We refer to Briggs' Magic Relief, the grand specific for all summer complaints—diarrhœa, cholera morbus, dysentery, cramps, colic, sickness of the stomach and bowel complaints.

A Local Witest.—A dressmaker who was at the point of death recovered, and the local paper headed the item, "Survival of the Fittest."

Victims to Constipation and its untold miseries can keep in good condition, by a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, the surest, safest and most reliable Cathartic.

Epilepsy (Fits) successfully treated. Pamphlet of particulars one stamp. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

Pope Leo XIII. entertains himself when at leisure, it is said, by snaring birds in the Vatican gardens.

What is it?—What is it to be a man? Well, it is a great deal like work to be a man, and that is the chief reason why men, real men, are so very few.

Weakness Cured.

WOODSTOCK, N. B., June 1, 1880.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir,—In December last I became very much reduced and very weak, so weak in fact, that I could not walk one hundred yards without becoming completely exhausted. I tried various remedies without any benefit. I happened to get a bottle of your VEGETINE through the weakness of a friend, and before I had used the whole bottle I was very much improved, and although I cannot say I am completely cured, I am satisfied that your VEGETINE possesses very valuable medicinal qualities, it having acted so magically in my case.

Mr. H. R. Stevens, Boston, Mass.:

Shortly after using it I was enabled to resume my work, and I would recommend any person who are afflicted as I was to try Vegetine.

THE NEW 32-CALIBRE WINCHESTER

The 32-Calibre Winchester, now offered for the first time, is intended to meet a large and growing demand for a repeater of small calibre. It is a modification of the Model of 1873, using the same frame, or receiver, but with a lighter barrel, and magazine of smaller diameter. It is considerably lighter than the Model of 1873, and is designed for small game at short range, and will be found the most accurate small-bore rifle in the market; especially valuable for hunting squirrels, geese, &c. The standard length of barrel is 24 inches. All the guns of this calibre will be made with rifle butt stock with solid butt plate, and without the cleaning-rod usually put in the stock. Prices and extras same as model 1873. The cartridge used with this arm is centre fire, and contains 20 grains of powder and 115 grains of lead.

Parties desiring to inspect these goods before purchasing can do so by sending us $1. We will express the gun C.O.D. If not satisfactory, you have the privilege of returning it. If the $1 more than covers express charges, we will remit you the difference; and this rule applies to all goods in our catalogue. Send 6 cents for our 96-page catalogue, containing over 600 illustrations of Firearms, Watches, Jewellery, Silverware, &c.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words, among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of the terrors to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their painful effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its early use in sudden attacks.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

HAMILTON, Mo., June 14, 1881.

B. J. KENDALL & Co.,—Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, and have found it to be all that it is recommended to be and in fact more too; I have removed by using the above: Callous Bone Spavins, Ring-bone, Splints, and can cheerfully testify and recommend it to be the best thing for any bony substance I have ever used, and have tried many as I have made that my study for years.

Respectfully yours,
P. V. CRIST.

FROM

Col. T. L. Foster.

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 10, 1880.

DR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I had a very valuable Hambletonian colt that I prized very highly, he had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame; I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express. I determined at once to try it, and got our druggist here to send for it, they ordered three bottles; I took them all and thought I would give it a thorough trial, I used it according to directions and the fourth day the colt ceased to be lame and the lumps have disappeared. I used but one bottle and the colt's limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the state. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that I let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now using it.

Very respectfully,
L. T. FOSTER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

WINGHAM, Ont., Jan. 17, 1882.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—This is to certify that I have used Kendall's Spavin Cure, bought from C. E. Williams, druggist, Wingham, Ont., and do without hesitation pronounce it to be an invaluable remedy for the cure of Spavins, Ringbones, or Curbs. I used it on a bone spavin of several years growth which it completely removed, and I can safely say it will remove any Spavin, Curb or Ringbone it properly used. I have also recommended friends to use it, who have done so with perfect success. I gladly make this public, and will answer any questions or letters sent me.

Yours &c.
GEORGE BRYCE.

Kendall's Spavin Cure
ON HUMAN FLESH.

WEST ENOSBURGH, Vt., Feb. 15, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—Several months ago I injured my knee joint which caused an enlargement to grow the size of a walnut and caused me very severe pain all the time for four or five weeks, when I began to use Kendall's Spavin Cure with the most satisfactory results. It has entirely removed the enlargement and stopped the lameness and pain. I have long known it to be excellent for horses but now I know it to be the best liniment for human flesh that I am acquainted with.

Yours truly,
T. P. LAWRENCE.

ST. JOHN, P Q Oct. 27, 1881.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents:—I have used your Spavin Cure with great success on spavins, curbs and splints. I know it to be a good remedy for ringbones, bone spavins' cuts, galls and all kinds of lameness and other difficulties about the horse. One of my men sprained his ankle very badly. I applied Kendall's Spavin Cure and I never saw anything work like it, he was well in a few days. I know it to be good for man as well as beast. I procured one of your Treatise on the Horse, by mail for 25cts, and I think it was the means of saving me $100 on one horse that I treated according to the directions given in your book for displaced stifle.

Yours truly,
WM. J. PEARSON.

Send address for Illustrated Circular, which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.
